others; this being an heterostrophia, the twirl be-
To TWIST, v. a. [twecpian, Sax. twisten,
Dutch.]

1. To form by complication; to form by convolution.

Do but despair,
And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twisted from her womb
Will strangle thee. Shakespeare.

To reprove discontent, the ancients feigned, that in hell stood a man twisting a rope of hay; and silk twisted on, suffering an ass to eat up all the was finished. Taylor.

Would Clotho with her hands in milk,
And twist our thread with gold and silk;
Would she in friendship, peace, and plenty,
Spin out our years to four times twenty;
And should we both in this condition
Have conquer'd love, and worse ambition;
Else these two passions by the way
May chance to shew us scurvy play. Pope.

The task were harder to secure my own
Against the power of those already known;
For well you twist the secret chains that bind
With gentle force the captivated mind. Lytton.

2. To contort; to writhe.

Either double it into a pyramical, or twist it into a serpentine form. Pope.

with the length, the thickness, and the twist. Archbishop.

TWISTED. n. f. [from twist.]

1. One who twists; a twister.
2. The instrument of twisting. To this word I have annexed some remarkable lines, which explain twist in all its senses.

When a twister a-twisting will twist him a twist,
For the twisting of his twist he three twines doth intwist;

But if one of the twines of the twist do untwist,
The twist that untwisteth untwisteth the twist.
Untwisting the twine that untwisteth between,
He twists with his twister the two in a twine;
Then twice having twisted the twines of the twine,
He twisteth the twine he had twined in twain.
The twain that in twining before in the twine,
As twains were intwisted, he now twist untwine.
Twist the twain intwisting a twine more between,
He, twining his twister, makes a twist of the twine.
Warton.

To TWIT. v. a. [ebutan, Saxon.] To sneer; to flout; to reproach.

When approaching the stormy towers
We fought with our flounders bear off the sharp rudiments.

There stands a structure on a rising hill,
Where tyros take their freedom out to kill. Garth.

V.

V A C

V Has two powers, expressed in modern English by two characters, v consonant and a vowel, which ought to be considered as two letters; but as they were long confounded while the two uses were annexed to one form, the old custom still continues to be followed.

V, the vowel, has two sounds; one clear, expressed at other times by eu, as obvise; the other close, and approaching to the Italian u, or English oo, as obvise.

V, the consonant, has a sound nearly approaching to those of b and f. With b it is by the Spaniards and Gascons always confounded, and in the Runick alphabet is expressed by the same character with f, distinguished only by a diacritical point. Its sound in English is uniform. It is never mute.

VACANCY. n. f. [from vacant.]

Vacation is all that time which passes between term and term, at London. Covent.

As these clerks want not their full task of labour during the open term, so there is for them whereupon to be occupied in the vacation only. Bacon.

2. Leisure; freedom from trouble or perplexity.

Benefit of peace, quiet, and vacation for piety, have rendered it necessary, in every christian commonwealth, by laws to secure propriety. Hammond.

VACCARY. n. f. [vacca, Lat.] A cow-house; a cow-pasture. Bailey.

VACILLANCY. n. f. [vacillans, from vacillo, Latin; vacillant, Fr.] A state of wavering; fluctuation; inconsistency. Not much in use.

I deny that all mutability implies imperfection, though some does, as that vacillancy in human souls, and such mutations as are found in corporeal matter. Mor.

VACILLATION. n. f. [vacillatio, from vacillo, Lat. vacillation, Fr.] The act or state of reeling or staggering.

The muscles keep the body upright, and prevent its falling, by readily assisting against every vacillation. Derham.

VACUATION. n. f. [from vacuus, Latin.]

The act of emptying. Duff.

VACUIST. n. f. [from vacuum.] A philosopher that holds a vacuum: opposed to a plenist.

Those spaces, which the vacuists would have to be empty, because they are manifestly devoid of air, the plenists do not prove replenished with subtle matter. Boyle.

VACUITY. n. f. [vacuitas, from vacuus, Lat. vacuit, Fr.]

1. Emptiness; state of being unfilled.

Hunger is such a state of vacuity, as to require a fresh supply of aliment. Arbutnot.

2. Space unfilled; space unoccupied.

In filling up vacuities, turning out shadows and ceremonies, by explicit preterition of substantial duties, which those shadows did obscurely represent. Hammond.

He, that feat soon failing, meets
A vast vacuity. Milton.

Body and space are quite different things, and a vacuity is interspersed among the particles of matter. Bentley.

God, who alone can answer all our longings, and fill every vacuity of our soul, should entirely possess our heart. Rogers.

Redeeming still at night these vacuities of the day. Fell.

3. Inanity; want of reality.

The soul is seen, like other things, in the mirror of its effects; but if they'll run behind the glass to catch at it, their expectations will meet with vacuity and emptiness. Glanville.

VACUOUS. adj. [vacuus, Lat. vacu, Fr.] Empty; unfilled.

Boundless the deep, because I AM who fill Infinitude: nor vacuous the space. Milton.

VACUUM. n. f. [Latin.] Space unoccupied by matter.

Our enquiries about vacuum, or space and atoms, will show us some good practical lessons. Watts.

TO VANE. v. n. [vado, Lat.] To vanish; to pass away. Spenser. A word useful in poetry, but not received.

Be ever gloried here thy sovereign name,
That thou may'st smile on all which thou hast made;

Whose frown alone can shake this earthly frame,
And at whose touch the hills in smoke shall vane. Watson.

VAGABOND. adj. [vagabundus, low Lat. vagabund, Fr.]

1. Wandering without any settled habitation; wanting a home.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian scath;
Vagabond exile: yet I would not buy
Their moe, y at the price of one fair word. Shak.
A vagabond debtor may be cited in whatever place or jurisdiction he is found. Ayliffe.

2. Wandering; vagrant.

This common body,
Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
Goes to, and back, lacerating the very magnitude. Shak.
Their prayers by envious winds Blown vagabond or frustrated. Milton.

VAGABOND. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A vagrant; a wanderer: commonly in a sense of reproach.

V A I

We call those people wanderers and vagabonds, that have no dwelling place. Raleigh.
Reduc'd, like Hamibal, to seek relief,
From court to court, and wander up and down
A vagabond in Afric. Addison.

2. One that wanders illegally, without a settled habitation.

Vagabond is a person without a home. Watts.
VAGA'BRY. n. f. [from vagus, Lat.] A wild freak; a capricious frolic.

They chang'd their minds,
Flew off, and into strange vagaries fell,
As they would dance. Milton.

Would your son engage in some frolic, or take a vagary, were it not better he should do it with than without your knowledge? Locke.

VAGINOPE'NNOUS. adj. [vagina and penna, Lat.] Sheath-winged; having the wings covered with hard cases.

VAGOUS. adj. [vagus, Latin; vague, Fr.] Wandering; unsettled. Not in use.

Such as were born and begot of a single woman, through a vagous lust, were called Sporii. Ayliffe.

VAGRANCY. n. f. [from vagrant.] A state of wandering; unsettled condition.

VAGRANT. adj. Wandering; unsettled; vagabond; unfixed in place.

Do not oppose popular mistakes and surmises, or vagrant and fictitious stories. Mure.

'Take good heed what men will think and say;
 That beautiful Emma vagrant courtes took,
 Her father's house, and civil life forsook.

Her lips no living bard, I weat,
 May say how red, how round, how sweet;
 Old Homer only could imitate
 Their vagrant grace, and soft delight:
 They stand recorded in his book,
 When Helen smil'd, and Hebe spoke. Prior.

VAGRANT. n. f. [vagant, French.] A sturdy beggar; wanderer; vagabond; man unsettled in habitation. In an ill sense.

Vagrants and outlaws shall offend thy view,
 Train'd to assault, and disciplin'd to kill. Prior.

You'll not the progress of your atoms stay,
 Nor to collect the vagrants find a way. Blackmore.

To relieve the helpless poor; to make sturdy vagrants relieve themselves; to hinder idle hands from being mischievous, are things of evident use. F. Atterbury.

Ye vagrants of the sky,

VAQUE. adj. [vague, Fr. vagus, Lat.]

1. Wandering; vagrant; vagabond.

Gray encouraged his men to set upon the vague villains, good neither to live peaceably, nor to fight. Hayward.

2. Unfixed; unsettled; undetermined; indefinite.

The perception of being, or not being, belongs no more to these vague ideas, signified by the terms, whatsoever and thing, than it does to any other ideas. Locke.

VAIL. n. f. [voile, Fr. This word is now frequently written veil, from velum, Lat. and the verb veil, from the verb velo; but the old orthography commonly derived it, I believe rightly, from the Fr.]

1. A curtain; a cover thrown over any thing to be concealed.

While they supposed to lie hid in their secret sins, they were scattered under a dark veil of forgetfulness. Wisdum.

2. A part of female dress, by which the face and part of the shape is concealed.

3. Money given to servants. It is commonly used in the plural. See VALE.

To VAIL. v. a. To cover. See VEIL.

To VAIL. v. a. [avalier le bonet, French. Addison writes it veil, ignorantly.]

1. To let fall; to suffer to descend.

They stiffly refused to veil their bonnets, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by seafarers. Carew.

The virgin 'gan her headdress veil,
 And thank'd him first, and thus began her tale. Palfrey.

2. To let fall in token of respect.

Certain of the Turks gallies, which would not veil their topmasts, the Venetians fiercely assailed. Knelles.

Before my princely state let your poor greatness fall,
 And vail your tops to me, the sovereign of you all. Drayton.

They had not the ceremony of veiling the bonnet in salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Addison.

3. To fall; to let sink in fear, or for any other interest.

That furious Scot
 'Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame
 Of those that turn'd their backs. Shakespeare

V A I

They stiffly refused to veil their bonnets, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by seafarers. Carew.

3. To fall; to let sink in fear, or for any other interest.

That furious Scot
 'Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame
 Of those that turn'd their backs. Shakespeare

To VAIL. v. n. To yield; to give place; to show respect by yielding. In this sense, the modern writers have ignorantly written veil.

Thy convenience must veil to thy neighbour's necessity; and thy very necessities must yield to thy neighbour's extremity. South.

VAIN. adj. [vain, Fr. vanus, Lat.]

1. Fruitless; ineffectual.

Let no man speak again
 To alter this; for counsel is but vain. Shakespeare.

Vain is the force of man,
 To crush the pillars which the pile sustains. Dryden.

2. Empty; unreal; shadowy.

Before the passage horrid Hydra stands,
 Gorgons, Geryon with his triple frame,
 And vain Chimera vomits empty flame. Dryden.

Unmov'd his eyes, and wet his beard appears;
 And shedding vain, but seeming real tears. Dryden.

3. Meanly proud; proud of petty things: with of before the cause of vanity.

No folly like vain glory; nor any thing more ridiculous than for a vain man to be full boasting of himself. L'Estrange.

He wad'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
 Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryden.

The minstrels play'd on every side,
Vain of their art, and for the mastery vy'd. Dryden.

To be vain is rather a mark of humility than pride. Vain men delight in telling what honours have been done them, what great company they have kept, and the like; by which they plainly confess, that these honours were more than their due, and such as their friends would not believe, if they had not been told: whereas a man truly proud thinks the honours below his merit, and scorns to boast. Swift.

Al friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
 To raise the thought, and touch the heart, be thine. Pope.

Here learn the great unreal wants to feign,
 Unpleasing truths here mortify the vain. Savage.

Ye vain! do flit from your erroneous strife;
 Be wise, and quit the false sublime of life;
 The true ambition there alone resides,
 Where justice vindicates, and wisdom guides. Young.

4. Showy; ostentatious.

Load some vain church with old thestrick state. Pope.

5. Idle; worthless; unimportant.

Both all things vain, and all who in vain things
 Built their fond hopes of glory, or lasting fame,
 Or happiness. Milton.

He heard a grave philosopher maintain,
 That all the actions of our life were vain,
 Which with our sense of pleasure not conspir'd. Denham.

To your vain answer will you have recourse,
 And tell 'tis ingenuit active force. Blackmore.

6. False; not true.

7. In VAIN. To no purpose; to no end; ineffectually; without effect.

He tempts in vain. Milton.

Providence and nature never did any thing in vain. L'Estrange.

Strong Halys stands in vain; weak Pilegys flies. Dryden.

The philosophers of old did in vain enquire, whether summum bonum consisted in riches, bodily delights, virtue, or contemplation. Locke.

If we hope for what we are not likely to possess, we act and think in vain, and make life a greater dream and shadow than it really is. Addison.

If from this discourse one honest man shall receive satisfaction, I shall think that I have not written nor lived in vain. Wret.

VAINGLO'RIOUS. adj. [vanus and gloriosus, Lat.] Boasting without performances; proud in disproportion to desert.

Vain-glorious man, when fluttering wind does blow,
 In his light wings is lifted up to fly. Spenser.

Strength to glory aspires Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton.

This his arrogant and vain-glorious exprobatio witnesseth. Haic.

VAINGLO'RY. n. f. [vana gloria, Latin.]

Pride above merit; empty pride; pride in little things.

He had nothing of vain-glory, but yet kept state and majesty to the height; being sensible, that majesty maketh the people bow, but vain-glory boweth to them. Bacon.

Expose every blast of vain-glory, every idle thought, to be chastened by the rod of spiritual discipline. Taylor.

This extraordinary person, out of his natural aversion to vain-glory, wrote several pieces which he did not assume the honour of. Addison.

A monarch's sword when mad vain-glory draws,
 Not Waller's wreath can hide the nation's scars. Pope.

VAINLY. adv. [from vain.]

1. Without effect; to no purpose; in vain.
 Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent Against th' invulnerable clouds of heav'n. Shaks.

In weak complaints you vainly waste your breath,
 They are not tears that can revenge his death. Dryden.

2. Proudly; arrogantly.

Humility teaches us to think neither vainly nor vauntingly of ourselves. De la v.

3. Idly; foolishly.

Nor vainly hope to be invulnerable. Milton.

If Lentulus be ambitious, he shall be vainly circelous; presuming his advancement to be decreed by the Sybilline oracles. Grav.

VAINNESS. n. f. [from vain.] The state of being vain; pride; falsehood; emptiness.

I hate ingratitude more in a man,
 Than lying, vainness, babbling. Shakespeare.

VAIN, or VAINLY. adj. [in heraldry.] Variegated with coverings of gold, red, or other colours.

VAINODE. n. f. [vainod, a governor, Slavonian.] A prince of the Ducian provinces.

VALANCE. n. f. [from Valencia, whence the use of them came, Skinner.] The fringes of drapery hanging round the tetter and head of a bed.

My house
 Is richly furnished with plate and gold;
 Valance of Venice, gold in needlework. Shaks.

Thrust the valance of the bed, that it may be full in sight. Swift.

To VALANCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To decorate with drapery. Not in use.

Old friend, thy face is valance since I saw thee last; canst thou to bend me? Shakespeare.

VALE. n. f. [val, Fr. vallis, Lat.]

1. A low ground; a valley; a place between two hills. Vale is a poetical word.

V A U

In Ida vale: who knows not Ida vale?
As hundred shepherds wined. Spenser.
Met in the vale of Arde. Shakespeare.
Anchises in a flow'ry vale, Review'd his mating'd sons, and took the tale. Dryden.

In those fair vales by nature form'd to please,
Where Guadalquivir serpentine with ease. Harte.
2. [From vail, profit; or vale, farewell.
If from vail, it must be written vail, as Dryden writes. If from vale, which I think is right, it must be vale.] Money given to servants.
Since our knights and senators account
To what their fordid, begging rails amount;
Judge what a wretched share the poor attends;
Whole whole subsistence on those alms depends. Dryden.

His revenue, besides vales, amounted to thirty pounds. Swift.
VALEDICTION. n. f. [valedico, Lat.] A farewell.

A valediction forbidding to weep. Dmne.
VALEDICTORY. adj. [from valedito, Lat.]
Bidding farewell.

VALENTINE. n. f. A sweetheart chosen on Valentine's day.

Now all nature seem'd in love,
And birds had drawn their valentines. Wotton.
VALERIAN. n. f. [valeriana, Lat. valer- ian, Fr.] A plant.
VALET. n. f. [valet, Fr.] A waiting servant.

Giving cast-clothes to be worn by valets, has a very ill effect upon little minds. Addison.

VALETUDINARIAN. } adj. [valetudinaire, VALETUDINARY. } Fr. valetudo, Lat.]
Weakly; sickly; infirm of health.

Physic, by purging noxious humours, prevents sickness in the healthy, or recoures thereof in the valetudinary. Brown.

Shifting from the warmer vallies to the colder hills, or from the hills to the vales, is a great benefit to the valetudinary, feeble part of mankind. Derham.

Some patients have been liable to this symptom, and reduced by it to a valetudinary and very unequal state of health. Blackmore.

Cold of winter, by stopping the pores of perspiration, keeps the warmth more within; whereby there is a greater quantity of spirits generated in healthy animals, for the case is quite otherwise in valetudinary ones. Cleynce.

Valetudinarians must live where they can command and scold. Swift.

VALENCE. n. f. [from valiant; valliance, Fr.] Valour; personal puissance; fierce-ness; bravery. Not in use.

With stiff force he shook his mortal lance
To let him weet his doughty valiance. Spenser.

VALIANT. adj. [valliant, Fr.] Stout; personally puissant; brave. We say, a valiant man; a valiant action.

Only be thou valliant for us, and fight the Lord's battles. 1 Samuel.

Hale, a very valliant fencer, undertook to teach that Kienec in a look, and was laughed at. Walton.
The church of Antioch might meet at that time to celebrate the memory of such a valliant combat and martyr of Christ. Nelson.

VALIANTLY. adv. [from valiant.] Stoutly; with personal strength; with personal bravery.

Farewel, kind lord; fight valliantly to-day:
Thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour. Shakespeare.

It was the duty of a good soldier valliantly to withstand his enemies, and not to be troubled with any evil hap. Knelles.

VALIANTNESS. n. f. [from valiant.] Valour; personal bravery; puissance;
serceness; stoutness.

Thy valliance was mine; thou suck'dst it from me. Shakespeare.
Achilles having won the top of the walls, by the valliance of the defendants was forced to retire. Knelles.

Shew not thy valliance in wine. Eccelesiasticus.
VALID. adj. [valide, Fr. validus, Lat.]
1. Strong; powerful; efficacious; prevalent.

Perhaps more valid arms,
Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
May serve to better us, and worse our foes. Milton.
2. Having intellectual force; prevalent;
weighty; conclusive.

A difference in their sentiments as to particular questions, is no valid argument against the general truth believed by them, but rather a clearer and more solid proof of it. Stephens.

VALIDITY. n. f. [validité, Fr. from valid.]

1. Force to convince; certainty.
You are persuaded of the validity of that famous verse.

'Tis expectation makes a blessing dear. Pope.
2. Value. A sense not used.

To thee and thine
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom;
No less in space, validity, and pleasure,
Than that conferr'd on Goneril. Shakespeare.

VALLANCY. n. f. [from vallance.] A large wig that shades the face.

But you, loud sirs, who through your curls look big,
Criticks in plume and white vallancey wig. Dryden.

VALLÉY. n. f. [vallée, Fr. vallis, Lat.]
A low ground; a hollow between hills.

Vallies are the intervals betwixt mountains.
Woodward.

Live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasure prove
That hills and vallies yield. Raleigh.

Sweet interchange of hill and vallies. Milton.
I have been ready to freeze on the top of a hill, and in an hour's time after have inured as great inconvenience from the heat of the vallies. Brown.

VALOROUS. adj. [from valour.] Brave;
stout; valiant.

The famous warriors of the antique world
Us'd trophies to erect in stately wise,
In which they would the records have enroll'd
Of their great deeds and valorous exploits. Spenser.

Captain Jany is a marvellous valorous gentleman. Shakespeare.

VALOROUSLY. adv. [from valorous.] In a brave manner.

VALOUR. n. f. [valour, Fr. valor, Lat.
Alisworth.] Personal bravery; strength;
prowess; puissance; stoutness.

That I may pour the spirits in thine ear,
And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,
All that impedes thee. Shakespeare.

Here I contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever an ambitious strength I did Contend against thy valour. Shakespeare.

When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. Shakespeare.

An innate valour appeared in him, when he put himself upon the soldier's defence, as he received the mortal stab. Hovel.

For contemplation he, and valour form'd;
For softness she, and sweet attractive grace. Milton.

Such were these giants; men of high renown!
For, in those days, might only shall be admir'd,
And valour, and heroic virtue, call'd. Milton.

Valour gives awe, and promises protection to those who want heart or strength to defend themselves.
This makes the authority of men among women;
and that of a master-back in a numerous herd. Temple.

VALUABLE. adj. [valable, Fr. from value.]

1. Precious; being of great price.

2. Worthy; deserving regard.

A just account of that valuable person, whose remains lie before us. F. Atterbury.
The value of several circumstances in story, lessens very much by distance of time; though some minute circumstances are very valuable. Swift.

VALUATION. n. f. [from value.]

1. The act of setting a value; appraisement.

Humility in man consists not in denying any gift that is in him, but in a just valuation of it, rather thinking too meanly than too highly. Ray.

2. Value set upon any thing.

No reason I find of your lives you set
So slight a valuation, should receive
My orack'd out to more rate. Shakespeare.

Take out of men's minds false valuations, and it would leave the minds of a number of men poor shrunk things. Bacon.

The writers expressed not the valuation of the denarius, without regard to its present valuation. Arbutnot.

VALUATOR. n. f. [from value.] An appraiser; one who sets upon any thing its price. A word which I have found now where else.

What valuators will the bishops make use of?
Swift.

VALUE. n. f. [value, Fr. valor, Latin.];

1. Price; worth.

Ye are physicians of no value,
Learn to live for your own sake, and the service of God; and let nothing in the world be of any value with you, but that which you can turn into a service to God, and a means of your future happiness. Lutw.

2. High rate.

Choler is well acquainted with your virtues,
And therefore sets this value on your life;
Let him but know the price of Cato's friendship,
And name your terms. Addison.

3. Rate; price equal to the worth of the thing bought.

He lent him money; it was with this obliging testimony, that his design was not to pay him the value of his pictures, because they were above any price. Dryden.

To VALUE. v. a. [valoir, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To rate at a certain price.

When the country grows better inhabited, the tithes and other obligations will be more augmented, and better valued. Spenser.

A mind valuing his reputation at the due price, will repute all dishonest gain much inferior there-unto. Carew.

God alone values right the good. Milton.

2. To rate highly; to have in high esteem.

Some of the finest treasures in dialogue, many very valued pieces of French, Italian, and English appear. Addison.

He values himself upon the compassion with which he relieved the afflicted. Atterbury.

To him your orchard's early fruits are due,
A pleasing offering, when 'tis made by you;
He values these. Pope.

3. To appraise; to estimate.

If he be poorer than estimation, the priest shall value him. Lection.

4. To be worth; to be equal in worth to.

The peace between the French and us not valued.
The cost that did conclude it. Shakespeare.

5. To take account of.

If a man be in sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock than with; for the mind doth value
every moment. Bacon.

6. To reckon at, with respect to number or power.

The queen is valued thirty thousand strong;
Her faction will be full as strong as ours. Shakespeare.

7. To consider with respect to importunee;
to hold important.

The king must take it ill.
So slightly valued as his messenger. Shakespeare.

VAN

Neither of them valued their promises, according to rules of honour or integrity. Clarendon.
 8. To compare with respect to price, or excellence.
 It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir. Joh.

9. To raise to estimation. This is a sense not in use.
 She ordered all things, resisting the wisdom of the wisest, by making the possessor thereof miserable; valuing the folly of the most foolish, by making the success prosperous. Sidney.

Some value themselves to their country by jealousies of the crown.
 Vanity, or a desire of valuing ourselves by showing others faults. Temple.

VA'LUABLE. adj. [from value.] Being of no value.
 A counterfeit Resembling majesty; which, touch'd and tried, Proves valueless. Shakspeare.
 VA'LUER. n. f. [from value.] He that values.
 Hammond was no valuer of trifles. Fell.

VALVE. n. f. [valva, Latin.]
 1. A folding door.
 Swift through the valves the visionary fair Repas'd. Pope.

Opening their valves, self-mov'd on either side,
 The adamant doors expanded wide:
 When death commands they close, when death commands divide. Harte.

2. Any thing that opens over the mouth of a vessel.
 This air, by the opening of the valve, and forcing up of the sucker, may be driven out. Boyle.

3. [In anatomy.] A kind of membrane, which opens in certain vessels to admit the blood, and shuts to prevent its regresses.
 The arteries, with a contractile force, drive the blood still forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Arbuthnot.

VA'LVULE. n. f. [valvule, Fr.] A small valve.
 VAMP. n. f. The upper leather of a shoe. Ainslie.

To VAMP. v. a. [This is supposed probably enough by Skinner to be derived from avant, Fr. before; and to mean, laying on a new outside.] To piece an old thing with some new part.
 You with
 To vamp a body with a dangerous physick, That's sure of death without. Shakspeare.

This opinion hath been vamped up by Cardan. Bentley.
 I had never much hopes of your vamped play. Swift.

VA'MPER. n. f. [from vamp.] One who pieces out an old thing with something new.

VAN. n. f. [from avant, Fr.]
 1. The front of an army; the first line.
 Before each can prick forth the airy knights. Milton.

The foe he had survey'd, Arrang'd, as 't' him they did appear.
 With van, main battle, wings and rear. Hudibras.

Can to van the foremost squadrons meet,
 The midmost battles bustling up behind. Dryden.

2. [van, Fr. vannus, Latin.] Any thing spread wide by which a wind is raised; a fan.
 The other token of their ignorance of the sea was an oar, they call it a corn ear. Broome.

3. A wing with which the air is beaten.
 His sail-broad vann
 Pleds for flight, and in the surging smoke Upheld from the ground. Milton.

A fiery globe
 Of angels full sail of wing drew nigh,
 Who on their plumed vans receiv'd him fast

From his uneasy station, and upbore,
 As on a floating couch, through the blithe air. Milton.

His disabled wing unfurrow'd:
 He wheel'd in air, and stretch'd his vans in vain;
 His vans no longer could his flight sustain. Dryden.

The vanes are broad on one side, and narrower on the other; both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Derham.

To VAN. v. a. [from vannus, Lat. vanner, Fr.] To fan; to winnow. Not in use.

This shifting our abode from the warmer and more vaporous air of the vallies, to the colder and more subtle air of the hills, is a great benefit to the valetudinarian part. Dicham.

2. Windy; flatulent.

It the mother eat much beans, or such vaporous food, it endangers th the child to become lunatick.
Bacon.

Some more subtle corporeal element may to equally bear against the parts of a little vaporous mixture, as to form it into round drops. More.

The food which is most vaporous and perspira-ble, is the most easily digested. Arbutnot.

A little tube, jetting out from the extremity of an artery, may carry off these vaporous streams of

VAPOUR. n. f. [vapeur, Fr. vapor, Lat.]

1. Any thing exhalable; any thing that mingles with the air.

Jove a dreadful storm call'd forth
Against our navy; covered there and all
With gloomy vapours. Chapman.

Vapour, and mist, and exhalation hot. Milton.

When first the sun too powerful beams displays,
It draws up vapours which obscure its rays;
But ev'n those clouds at last adorn its way,
Reflect new glories, and augment the day. Pope.

2. Fume; steam.

The morning is the best, because the imagination is not clouded by the vapours of meat. Dryden.

In distilling hot spirits, if the head of the still be taken off, the vapour which ascends out of the still will take fire at the flame of a candle, and the flame will run along the vapour from the candle to the still. Newton.

For the impotillame, the vapour of vinegar, and any thing which creates a cough, are proper.
Arbutnot.

3. Wind; flatulence.

In the Thesalian witches, and the meetings of witches that have been recorded, great wonders they tell of carrying in the air, transforming themselves into other bodies. These fables are the effects of imagination; for ornaments. If laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and lead them to the head extremely. Bacon.

VAR

4. Mental fume; vain imagination; fancy unreal.

If his arrow bring forth amendment, he hath the grace of hope, though it be clouded over with a melancholy vapour, that it be not discernible even to himself. Hammond.

5. [In the plural.] Diseases caused by flatulence; or by diseased nerves; hypochondriacal maladies; melancholy;
spleen.

To this we must ascribe the spleen, so frequent in studious men, as well as the vapours, to which the other sex are so often subject. Epistator.

To VAPOUR. v. n. [vapor, Lat.]

1. To pass in a vapour or fume; to fly off in evaporations.

When thou from this world wilt go,
The whole world vapours in thy breath. Donne.

Swift running waters vapour not so much as standing waters. Bacon.

3. To bully; to brag.

Not true, quoth he? Howe'er you vapour,
I can what I affirm make appear. Hudibras.

These are all the mighty pow'rs
You vainly boast, to try down ours;
And what in real value's wanting,
Supply with vapouring and ranting. Hudibras.

That I might not be vapour'd down by insignificant testimonies, I used the name of your society to annihilate all such arguments. Glanville.

Pe you to us but kind;
Let Dutchmen vapour, Spaniards curse,
No terror we shall find. E. Dorset.

To VAPOUR. v. a. To effuse, or scatter in fume or vapour.

Break off this last lamenting life,
Which sucks two souls, and in ours both away. Donne.

He'd laugh to see one throw his heart away,
Another fighting vapour forth his soul,
A third to melt himself in tears. Ben Jonson.

Opium holds some of its poisonous quality, it vapoured out, and mingled with spirit of wine.
Bacon.

It must be helped by somewhat which may fix the silver, never to be refined, or vapoured away, when incorporated into such a mass of gold. Bacon.

VARIABLE. adj. [variable, Fr. variabilis, Lat.] Changeable; mutable; inconstant.

O swear not by the moon's inconstant motion,
That monthly changes in her circled orb,
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable. Shaksp.

Happy countries different,
With variable objects, shall excel.
Thus something settled matter in his heart. Shaksp.

By the lively image of other creatures did those ancients represent the variable passions of mortals, as by serpents were signified deceivers. Raleigh.

His heart I know how variable, and vain, Self-love. Milton.

Was, from a variance, now a war become. Daniel.

Set not any one doctrine of the gospel at variance with others, which are all admirably consistent. Spratt.

She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen:
While a kind glance at her pursues flies,
How much at variance are her feet and eyes! Pope.

VAN

If the learned would not sometimes submit to the ignorant; the old to the weakness of the young; there would be nothing but astonishing variance in the world. Swift.

Many bleed,
By sinneful variance betwixt man and man. Thomson.

Who are they that set the first and second at variance with each other, when for four or five centuries, and more, they have agreed most amicably together? Waterland.

VARIATION. n. f. [variatio, Latin; variation, French.]

1. Change; mutation; difference from itself.

After much variation of opinions, the prisoner was acquitted of treason, but by most voices found guilty of felony. Hayward.

The operation of agents will easily admit of intention and remission; but the senses of things are conceived not capable of any such variation. Locke.

The same of our writers is confined to these two islands; and it is hard it should be limited in time as much as place, by the perpetual variations of our speech. Swift.

There is but one common matter, which is diversified by accidents; and the same numerical quantity, by variations of texture, may constitute successively all kinds of body. Hentley.

2. Difference; change from one to another.

In some other places are more learned born than males; which, upon this variation of proportion, I recommend to the curious. Grout.

Each sea had its peculiar shells, and the same variation of shells; this tract abounding such a terrifical matter as is proper for the formation of one sort of shell fish; that of another. Woodward.

3. Successive change.

Sir Walter Blunt,
Stain'd with the variation of each foil Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours. Shakspere.

4. [In grammar.] Change of termination of nouns.

The rules of grammar, and useful examples of the variation of words, and the peculiar form of speech, are often appointed to be repeated. Watts.

5. Change in natural phenomenons.

The duke ran a long course of calm prosperity, without any visible eclipse or wane in himself, amidst divers variations in others. Watson.

6. Deviation.

He observed the variation of our English from the original, and made an true translation of the whole for his private use. Fell.

If we admit a variation from the state of his creation, that variation must be necessarily after an eternal duration, and therefore within the compass of time. Hale.

I may seem sometimes to have varied from his sense; but the greatest variations may be fairly deduced from him. Dryden.

7. Variation of the compass; deviation of the magnetick needle from an exact parallel with the meridian.

VARIOUS. adj. [variosus, Latin.] Diseased with dilatation.

There are instances of one vein only being various, which may be destroyed by tying it above and below the dilatation. Sharp.

To VAREGATE. v. a. [variegatus, school Latin.] To diversify; to stain with different colours.

The shells are filled with a white spar, which variegates and adds to the beauty of the stone. Woodward.

They had fountains of variegated marble in these rooms. Arbutnot.

Ladies like variegated tulip show;
Tis to the changes half the clothes we owe.
Such happy spots the nice admirers take,
Fine by defect, and delicately weak. Pope.

VAREGATION. n. f. [from variegatus.]

Diversity of colours.

V A R

Plant your choice tulips in natural earth, somewhat impoverished with very fine sand; else they will soon lose their variegations. Ezotyn.
VARIETY. n. f. [varieté, Fr. varietas,
Latin.]

1. Change; succession of one thing to another; intermixture of one thing with another.

All sorts are here; that all the earth yields;
Variety without end. Milton.
Variety is nothing else but a continued novelty.
South.

If the sun's light consisted of but one sort of rays,
there would be but one colour in the whole world,
nor would it be possible to produce any new colour
by reflections or refractions; and by consequence that the variety of colours depends upon the composition of light. Newton.

2. One thing of many by which variety is made. In this sense it has a plural.

The inclosed warmth which the earth hath in itself, stirred up by the heat of the sun, affords nature in the speedier procreation of those varieties which the earth bringeth forth. Raleigh.

3. Difference; dissimilitude.

There is a variety in the tempers of good men, with relation to the different impressions they receive from different objects of charity. F. Atterbury.

4. Variation; deviation; change from a former state.

It were a great vanity to reject those reasons drawn from the nature of things, or to go about to answer those reasons by suppositions of a variety in things, from what they now appear. Hale.

5. Many and different kinds.

He now only wants more time to do that variety of good which his soul thirsts after. Law.

VARIOUS. adj. [varius, Latin.]

1. Different; several; manifold.

Then were they known to men by various names,
And various idols, through the heathen world.
Milton.

2. Changeable; uncertain; unfixed; unlike itself.

The names of mixed modes want standards in nature, whereby to adjust their signification; therefore they are very various and doubtful. Locke.

3. Unlike each other.

He in derision sets
Upon their tongues a various spirit,
To raise quite out their native language. Milton.
So many and so various laws are given. Milton.
Vast crowds of vanquish'd nations march along,
Various in arms, in habit, and in tongue. Dryden.
Various of temper, as of face or frame,
Each individual: his great end the same. Pope.

4. Variegated; diversified.

Herbs sudden flower'd,
Opening their various colours. Milton.

VARIOUSLY. adv. [from various.] In a various manner.

Having been variously tossed by fortune, directed his course to a safe harbour. Bacon.
Various objects from the Kenic, Variously representing. Milton.
Those various squadrons, variously design'd;
Each vessel freighted with a several load;
Each squadron wailing to a several wind;
All find but one, to burn them in the road. Dryd.
Different aliments, while they repair the fluids and solids, act variously upon them according to

VARIX. n. f. [latius; varice, French.]

A dilatation of the vein.
In ulcers of the legs, accompanied with varices or dilatations of the veins, the varix can only be assisted by the bandage. Sharp.

VARLET. n. f. [varlet, old French, now valet.]

1. Anciently a servant or footman.

Such lords ill example do give,
Where varlets and drabs so may live. Tass.
They spy'd
A varlet running towards them hastily. Spenser.

V A R

2. A scoundrel; a rascal. This word has deviated from its original meaning, as far in Latin.

I am the varlet varlet that ever chide thee. Shaksp.
Where didst thou leave these varlets? Shaksp.
Thou, varlet, dost thy master's gains devour;
Thou wilt fit his ewes, and often twice so hour.
Dryden.

When the Roman legions were in a disposition to mutiny, an impudent varlet, who was a private centinel, resolv'd to try the power of his eloquence.
Adrian.

V'ARLETRY. n. f. [from varlet.] Rabble;
crowd; populace.

Shall they hoist me up,
And shew me to the shouting varlettry
Of cens'ring Rome? Shakspere.

VARNISH. n. f. [vernis, French; ver-nix, Latin.]

1. A matter laid upon wood, metal, or other bodies, to make them shine.

We'll put on those shall praise your excellence,
And set a double varnish on the same. Shakspere.
The fame of Cicero had not borne her age so well, if it had not been joined with varnish.
Like unto varnish, that makes ceilings not only shine, but last. Bacon.

This blue varnish, that the green endears,
The sacred rust of twice ten hundred years. Pope.

2. Cover; palliation.

To VARNISH. v. a. [verniffer, vernir, Fr.
from the noun.]

1. To cover with something shining.

O vanity!
To set a pearl in steel so meanly varnish'd. Sidney.
Clamsh not you up to the cements,
Nor thrust your head into the public street,
To gaze on christian fools with varnish'd faces.
Shakspere.

2. To cover; to conceal or decorate with something ornamental.

Specious deeds on earth, which glory excites,
Or close ambition varnish'd o'er with zeal. Milton.
Young people are used to varnish over their non-performance and forbearance of good actions by a pretence unto humility. Fell.

His manly heart was still above
Disfouled hate, or varnish'd love. Dryden.

Men epouze the well-endow'd opinions in fashion,
and then seek arguments to make good their beauty,
or varnish over and cover their deformity. Locke.

3. To palliate; to hide with colour of rhetorick.

They varnish all their errors, and secure
The ill they act, and all the world endure. Denb.
Cato's voice was ne'er employ'd
To clear the guilty, and to varnish crimes. Addison.
Speak the plain truth, and varnish not your crimes! Philips.

VARNISHER. n. f. [from varnish.]

1. One whose trade is to varnish.

An oil obtained of common oil may probably be of good use to surgeons and varnishers. Boyle.

2. A disfigurer; an adorning.

Modest dulness lurks in thought's disguise;
Thou varnisher of fools, and cheat of all the wife.
Pope.

VARVELS. n. f. [vertelles, French.] Silver rings about the leg of a hawk, on which the owner's name is engraved.

To VARY. v. a. [varior, Latin; varier, French.]

1. To change; to make unlike itself.

Let your ceaseless change
Vary to our great Creator still new praise. Milton.

2. To change to something else.

Gods, that never change their state,
Vary oft their love and hate. Waller.
The master's hand, which to the life can trace
The airs, the lines, the features of the face,
May, with a free and bolder stroke, express
A vary'd posture, or a flatt'ring dress. Dennis.

V A S

We are to vary the customs, according to the time and country where the scene of action lies.
Dryden.

He varies every shape with ease,
And tries all forms that may Pomona please. Pope.

3. To make of different kinds.
- God hath divided the genius of men according to the different parts of the world; and varied their inclinations, according to the variety of actions to be performed. Brown.

4. To diversify; to variegate.
- God hath here
Vary'd his bounty so with new delights. Milton.

To VARY. v. a.

1. To be changeable; to appear in different forms.
- Darling stands
The varying shore o' the world. Shakspere.

2. To be unlike each other.

Those who made laws, had their minds polish'd above the vulgar: and yet unaccountably the public constitutions of nations vary. Cather.

3. To alter; to become unlike itself.

He had a strange interchanging of large and in-expected pardons, with several executions; which could not be imputed to any inconstancy, but to a principle he had set unto himself, that he would vary, and try both ways in turn. Bacon.

So varied he, and of his tortuous train
Curl'd many a wanton wreath. Milton.

That each from other differs, first confess;
Next, that he varies from himself no less. Pope.

4. To deviate; to depart.

The crime confus in violating the law, and serving from the right rule of reason. Locke.

5. To succeed each other.

While fear and anger, with alternate grace,
Pant in her breast, and vary in her face. Addison.

6. To disagree; to be at variance.

In judgment of her substance thus they vary,
And vary thus in judgment of her foot;
For some her chair up to the brain do carry,
Some sink it down into the stomach's heat. Dana.

7. To shift colours.

Will the falcon, stooping from above,
Smit with her varying plumage, spare the dove?
Admires the jay the insect's gilded wings?
Or hears the hawk when Philomela sings? Pope.

VARY. n. f. [from the verb.] Change;
alteration. Not in use.

Such smiling rogues as these foath every passion;
Reneg, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks,
With every gale and vary of their masters. Shakspere.

VASCULAR. adj. [from vasculum, Lat.]

Consisting of vessels; full of vessels.

Nutrition of the solids is performed by the circulating liquid in the smallest vascular solids.
Arbuthnot.

VASCULIFEROUS. adj. [vasculum and fero, Latin.] Such plants as have, beside the common calyx, a peculiar vessel to contain the seed, sometimes divided into cells; and these have always a monopetalous flower, either uniform or dis-form. Quincey.

VASE. n. f. [vasse, French; vasa, Latin.]

1. A vessel; generally a vessel rather for show than use.

The toilet stands unveil'd,
Each silver vasse in my stick order laid. Pope.

2. It is used for a solid piece of ornamental marble.

VASSAL. n. f. [vassal, French; vassallo,
Italian.]

1. One who holds of a superior lord.

My pretty prince, vassal to the emperor, can cost what money he pleaseth. Swift.

The vassals are invited to bring in their coun-plaies to the society, who imprison and chastise their matters. Addison.

2. A subject; a dependant.

She came to the land with performance of his discipline, then took at her side a vessel, which Saturn had made for punishment to punish those who over the hills of the world.

The common people were not king, not slaves and vassals to their lords.

The mind hath not reason to remember, that passions ought to be her vassals, not her masters.

Vassals of his anger, when the scourge
Incorable, and the torturing hour
Calls us to penance.

As all his vassals eagerly desired;
With mind averse, he rather underwent
His people's will, than gave his own consent.

He subjected a king, and called him his vassal.

A servant; one who acts by the will of another.

I am his fortune's vassal, and I lend him
The greatest he has got.

A slave; a low wretch.
Thou swear'st thy gods in vain.

VASSALAGE. n. f. [vasselage, French;
from vassal.] The state of a vassal; tenure at will; servitude; slavery; dependance.

He renounc'd the vassalage
Of Rome again.

All my powers do their bestowing love,
Like vassalage at unawares encountering
The eye of majesty.

They would have brought the Achæans from the condition of followers and dependents unto mere vassalage.

Let us not then pursue,
By force impossible, by leave obtain'd
I unacceptable, though in heav'n our state
Of splendid vassalage.

Cure'd vassalage,
First idoliz'd till love's hot fire be o'er,
Then slaves to those who courted us before.

AST. adj. [vasse, French; vassus, Lat.]
Large; great.

What the parliament meant to attempt with those vast numbers of men, every day levied.

That is an ample and capacious mind, which takes in vast and sublime ideas without pain.

His open stores,
Though vast, were little to his ample heart.

Vitiously great; enormously extensive or capacious.

The vicious language is vast and gaping, swelling and irregular; when it contends to be high, full of rock, mountain, and pointedness.

So bore the ship aloft her fiery bound,
About whom rusted the billows, black, and vast.

They view'd the vast unmeasurable abyss.

Others with vast Typhæan rage, more fell,
Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air
In whirlwinds, hell scarce holds the wild uproar.

AST. n. f. [vastum, Latin.] An empty vase.

They took hands, as over a vast; and embraced,
From the ends of oppo'd winds.

Through the vast of heav'n it founded.

The watery vast,
Secure of storms, your royal brother pass.

ASTATION. n. f. [vastatio, from vastus, Latin.] Waste; depopulation.

This wild-fire made the saddest vastation; the many fatal outrages which these raging conflagrations.

ASTIDITY. n. f. [vastitas, Latin; from
VOL. II.

vast;] Wideness; immensity. A barrenness.

VASTLY. adv. [from vast.] Greatly; to a great degree.

Holland's relying upon its own defence, without aid in the war, would leave us to enjoy the trade of the world, and thereby grow vastly both in strength and treasure.

They may, and do vastly differ in their manners, institutions, customs; but yet all of them agree in having some deity to worship.

It is vastly the concern of government, and of themselves too, whether they be morally good or bad.

VASTNESS. n. f. [from vast.] Immensity;
enormous greatness.

Behemoth, biggest born of earth, upheav'd
His vastness.

She by the rocks compell'd to stay behind,
Is by the vastness of her bulk confus'd.

When I compare this little performance with the vastness of my subject, methinks I have brought but a cockle-shell of water from the ocean.

Ariosto observed not moderation in the vastness of his draught.

Hence we may discover the cause of the vastness of the ocean.

VASTY. adj. [from vast.] Large; enormously great.

I can call spirits from the vasty deep.

VAT. n. f. [vat, Dutch; vat, Saxon.] A vessel in which liquors are kept in the immature state.

Plump Bachelors, with pink eyes,
In thy vat our ears be drown'd.

Let him produce his vats and tubs, in opposition to heaps of arms and standards.

Wouldst thou thy vats with generous juice should froth,

Respect thy orchards.

VATICIDE. n. f. [vates and cædo, Lat.] A murderer of prophets.

The caillif vaticide conceiv'd a pray'r.

To VATICINATE. v. n. [vaticinor, Latin.]
To prophesy; to practise prediction.

The most admired of all prophane prophets, whose predictions have been so much cried up, did vaticinate here.

VAVASSEUR. n. f. [vavasseur, Fr.] One who himself holding of a superior lord, has others holding under him.

Names have been taken of civil honours, as king, knight, valuator, or emperor, quine.

VAVDEVIL. n. f. [vandeville, Fr.] A song common among the vulgar, and sung about the streets. Tree. A ballad; a trivial strain.

VAULT. n. f. [voulte, Fr. volta, Italian;
voluta, low Latin.]

1. A continued arch.

O, you are men of stone!
Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so That heaven's vault should crack.

The word signifies an orb or sphere. And this shews us both the form of the Mosical abyss, which was included within this vault; and the form of the habitable earth, which was the outward surface of this vault, or the cover of the abyss.

2. A cellar.

Creep into the kill-hole.
He will seek there; neither press, well, vault,
but he ligh an abstract for the remembrance of.

The time of life is drawn, and the negro leech
Is left this vault to brag of.

Whether your fruitful fancy lies
To banish that that haunts our vault:

3. A cave; a cavern.

The silent vaults of death, unknown to light,
And hark! he's naked to his light.

4. A repository for the dead.

Shall I not be lifted in the vault,
To whistle foul mouth and healthsome air through it?

To VAULT. v. n. [vouter, French, vault,
noun.]

1. To arch; to shape to a vault.

Hath nature given them
To see this vaulted arch, and the arch
Of sea and land, which sun the
The fiery orb above, and the twinkling stars
Upon th' humbled beach?

2. To cover with an arch.

Over-head the dismal hill
Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew;
And flying vaulted o'erhead with fire.

To VAULT. v. n. [voltiger, Fr. volteggiare,
Italian.]

1. To leap; to jump.

Faulting ambition, which o'erleaps itself,
And falls on th' other.

The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me, Knowing that thou would'st have me drown'd on shore.

He is vaulting variable ramps,
In your despite, upon your parts.

If I could win a lady by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on, I should quickly leap into a wife.

Leaning on his lance, he vaulted on a tree.

If a man should leap a garret, or vault down the monument, would he leave the memory of a hero behind him?

Lucan vaulted upon Pegasus with all the heat and intrepidity of youth.

2. To play the tumbler, or posturist.

VAULT. n. f. [from the verb.] A leap; a jump.

VULTAGE. n. f. [from vault.] Arched cellar. Not in use.

He'll call you to so hot an answer for it,
That caves and wondrous vaultages of France
Shall chide your tripping, and return your mock.

In second accent to his ordinance.

VALTER. adj. [from vault.] Arched;
concave.

Restore the lock! the creak, and all around Restore the lock! the vaulted roof rebound.

VALTER. n. f. [from vault.] A leaper;
a jumper; a tumbler.

VULTY. adj. [from vault.] Arched; concave. A bad word.

I will kiss thy detestable bones,
And put my eye balls in thy vaulty brows,
And ring thy fingers with thy hundred worms.

I'll say that's not the bark whose notes do beat
The vaulty heavens to high above our heads.

To VAUNT. v. n. [vanter, French.] To boast; to display with ostentation.

Not that great champion
Whom famous poets' verse so much doth praise,
And bath for twelve huge labours high extoll'd,
So many times and sharp bits did haunt.

Not only danc'd which her vaulted most
In skillful knitting of soft silken twine.

My vanquisher, spoil'd of his vaulted spoil.

To VAUNT. v. n.

1. To play the braggart; to talk with ostentation; to make vain show; to boast.

You say, you are a better soldier;
Let it appear so; make your vaunting true.

The illusions of magick were put down, and their vaunting in wisdom reproved with diligence.

So spake th' apostate angel, though in pain;
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair.

Pride, which prompts a man to strut and overvalue what he is, does incline him to divination when he has.

V. B. B.

VEGETABLE, n. f. [vegetabilis, school Latin; vegetable, French]. Any thing that grows without culture, as grass, etc.

...with different
...from without
...fixed to the earth, or to
...in the vicinity of plants;
...of pure distributed over the ...whole surface, as in sub-marine plants.
...Let fruits and vegetables that cannot drink.
...of food, drink, and other necessities.

There are several kinds of creatures in the world, and degrees of dignity amongst them; some being more excellent than others, animate more than inanimate, sensitives more than vegetables, and men more than brutes.

Other estimated substances are called vegetables, which have within themselves the principle of another sort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves, flowers, and fruit, such as we see in plants, herbs, trees.

1. Belonging to a plant.
The vegetable world, each plant and tree,
From the fair cedar on the craggy brow,
To creeping moss.

2. Having the nature of plants.
Amidst them stood the tree of life,
High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit
Of vegetable gold.

To VE'GETATE. v. n. [vegeto, Latin.] To grow as plants; to shoot out; to grow without sensation.

As long as the seeds remained lodged in a natural soil, they would soon vegetate, and send forth a new set of trees.

See dying vegetables life sustain;
See life dissolving vegetate again.

VEGETATION. n. f. [from vegeto, Lat.]

The exterior surface consisted of a reddish matter proper for the nourishment of plants, but little entangled with mere mineral matter, it was unfit for vegetation.

Of vegetation its the steaming power
At large.

Love warbles through the vocal groves,
And vegetation paints the plain.

3. The power of growth without sensation

Plants, though beneath the excellency of creatures endued with sense, yet exceed them in the faculty of vegetation and of fertility.

VEGETATIVE. adj. [vegetatif, Fr. from vegetate.]
f. Having the quality of growing without 1116: Organisms vegetative and growing live the same to themselves. Result: Having the power to produce growth plants.

The nature of plants, each could in have vegetative form, by which they receive nourishment and growth, and are enabled to multiply a thousand fold.

7. kind

VEGETATIVE. adj. [from vegeto, Latin.]
Vegetable; having the nature of plants.
Nor rent off, but cut off ripe with a knife,
For hindering stalks of his vegetative life. Tupper.

VEGETIVE. n. s. [from the adjective.]
A vegetable.
Hence vegetative receive their fragrant birth,
And clothe the naked bosom of the earth. Saunders.
The tree still painted in the unshad'd part,
Not wholly vegetive; and heav'd her heart. Dryden.

VEHEMENCE. n. s. [from vehementia, Latin.]
1. Violence; force.
Universal hubbub wild,
Of running sounds and voices all confus'd,
Assaults his ear with loudness of vehemence. Milton.

2. Ardour; mental violence; fervour.
Think ye are men; deem it not impossible
For you to err: sit impartially your own hearts,
Whether it be force of reason, or vehemency of affection,
Which hath bred, and still doth feed these opinions in you. Hooker.

The best persuasions
Fail not to use; and with what vehemency
The occasion shall instruct you. Shakspeare.
Would it apply well to the vehemence of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy? Shakspeare.

The extremity of the condition produced some earnestness and vehemency of expression more than ordinary. Clarendon.

This pure cause would kindle my rapt spirits
To such a flame of sacred vehemence,
That dumb things would be mov'd to sympathize. Milton.

He hurries on his action with variety of events, and ends it in less compass than two months. This vehemence of his is most suitable to my temper. Dryden.

Marcus is over-warm; his fond complaints
Have to much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper. Addison.

VEHEMENT. adj. [vehement, French; vehemens, Latin.]
1. Violent; forcible.
A strong imagination hath more force upon light and subtle motions, than upon motions vehement or ponderous. Bacon.
Gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time, without any change. Grew.

2. Ardent; eager; fervent.
By their vehement instigation,
Is this just suit come I to move your grace. Shakspeare.
I find
In all things else delight indeed; but such
As, us'd or not, works in the mind no change,
Nor vehement desire. Milton.

VEHEMENTLY. adv. [from vehement.]
1. Forcibly.
The Christian religion inculcates kindness more vehemently, and forbids malice and hatred more strictly, than any religion did before. Tillotson.

VEHICULAR. n. s. [from vehiculum, Latin.]
1. That in which any thing is carried.
Evil spirits might very properly appear in the clothes of flames, to terrify and frighten. Addison.

2. That part of a medicine which serves to make the principal ingredient potable.
That the most delicate by one passage; the thick, or moistening vehicle, by another, is a popular receipt. Boyle.

VEIL. n. s. [from velo, Latin.]
1. To cover with a veil, or any thing which conceals the face.
Her face was veild; yet, to my fancied sight,
Love's sweetest, goodness in her person shined. Milton.

2. To cover; to invest.
It became the Jewish fashion, when they went to pray, to veil their heads and faces. Boyle.

3. To hide; to conceal.
From yonder blazing cloud that veils the hill,
One of the heavenly host. Milton.

4. To hide; to conceal.
Of darkness visible so much be lent,
As half to show, half veil the deep intent. Pope.

VEIL. n. s. [from velum, Latin.]
1. A cover to conceal the face.
To feed his fiery lustful eyes
He snatch'd the veil that hung over his face before. Spenser.

The Egyptian queen from that deep battle came,
With gored head, and veil to redly torn.
Like terror did among the immortals breed. Waller.

The famous painter could allow no place
For private sorrow in a prince's face:
Yet, that his piece might not exceed belief,
He cast a veil upon supposed grief. Waller.

As veils transparent cover, but not hide,
Such metaphors appear when right apply'd.
When through the phrase we plainly see the sense,
Truth with such obvious meanings will dispense. Granville.

She accepts the hero, and the dame
Wraps in her veil, and frees from sense of shame. Pope.

2. A cover; a disguise.
I will pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so seeming Mrs. Page; divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Acton. Shakspeare.
Knock on my heart; for thou hast skill to find
If it found solid, or be fill'd with wind;
And thro' the veil of words thou view'st the naked mind. Dryden.

The ill-natured man exposes those failings in human nature, which the other would cast a veil over. Addison.

VEIN. n. s. [veine, French; vena, Latin.]
1. The veins are only a continuation of the extreme capillary arteries reflected back again towards the heart, and uniting their channels as they approach it, till at last they all form three large veins;
the cava descendens, which brings the blood back from all the parts above the heart; the cava ascendens, which brings the blood from all the parts below the heart; and the porta, which carries the blood to the liver. The coats of the veins are the same with those of the arteries, only the muscular coat is as thin in all the veins as it is in the capillary arteries; the pressure of the blood against the sides of the veins being less than that against the sides of the arteries. In the veins there is no pulse, because the blood is thrown into them with a continued stream, and because it moves from a narrow channel to a wider. The capillary veins unite with one another, as the capillary arteries. In all the veins perpendicular to the horizon, excepting those of the uterus and of the porta, are small membranous or valvular, like so many half thimbles stuck to the side of the veins, which oppose the blood towards the heart, in the motion of the blood towards the heart, they are placed close to the sides of the veins; but if blood should fall back, it must fill the valves; and, being being distended, stop up the channels, that no blood can repeat them. Boyle.

When I did first impart my love to thee,
I freely told you all the wealth I had;
Man in my veins; I was a guinea then.
Hartley Hall.

2. Hollow; cavity.
Found where casual sea
Had washed woods, on mountain, or in vale,
Down to the veins of earth. Milton.

Let the glass of the prism be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plane, and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from sand-holes. Newton.

3. Course of metal in the mine.
There is a vein for the silver. Job.
Part hidden veins dig'd up, nor hath the earth
Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton.
It is as men as in folk, where veins there be a vein of gold which the owner heeds not at all.

4. Tenderness; softness of the mind or genius.
Invoke the muses, and improve my vein, Waller.
We ought to attempt no more than what is in the compass of our genius, and according to our vein. Dryden.

5. Favourable moment; time when any inclination is predominant.
Artizans have not only their growths and perfec-tions, but likewise their veins and times. Watson.

6. Humour; temper.
I put your grace in mind
Of what you promis'd me.
—I am not in the giving vein to-day. Shakspeare.

If young African for same His wasted country freed from Punick rage, The deed becomes unprais'd the man at least, And loses, though but verbal, his reward. Alford.

Being at first out of the way to science, in the progress of their inquiries they must lose themselves, and the truth, in a verbal labyrinth. Glanville.

It was such a denial or confession of him as would appear in preaching; but this is managed in words and verbal profession. South.

4. Verbose; full of words. Out of use.

I am sorry

You put me to forget a lady's manners. Shakespeare.

By being so verbal.

5. Minutely exact in words.

Wagled the rules each word which says,
For not to know some things is to pray.

6. Literat, having words according to words.
Whoever offers at verbal translation, shall have the misfortune of that young traveller, who lost his own language abroad, and brought home no other instead of it.

The verbal copier is incumber'd with so many difficulties at once, that he can never disentangle himself from all.

7. [verbal, Fr. in grammar.] A verbal noun is a noun derived from a verb.
VERBALITY, n. f. [from verbal.] Mere words; bare literal expression.

Sometimes it will seem to be charmed with words of holy verities, and to fly from the letter and dead verities, who must only start at the life and animated materials thereof.

VERBALLY, adv. [from verbal.]

1. In words; orally.

The manner of our denying the deity of Christ here prohibited, was by words and oral expressions verbally to deny it.

2. Word for word.

'Tis almost impossible to translate verbally, and well, at the same time.

VERBATIM, adv. [Latin.] Word for word.

Think not, although in writing I prefer'd
The matter of thy vile outrageous crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen.

See the transcripts of both charters verbatim in Mat. Paris.

To VERBERATE, v. a. [verbero, Latin.]
To beat; to strike.

VERBERATION, n. f. [verberation, Fr.
from verbero.] Blows; beating.

Riding or walking against great winds is a great exercise, the effects of which are redness and inflammation; all the effects of a soft press or verberation.

VERBOSE, adj. [verbosus, Lat.] Exuberant in words; prolix; tedious by multiplicity of words.

Ill judging and verbose, from Lethe's lake
Draw tuns unmeasurable.

They ought to be brief, and not too verbose in their way of speaking; and to propound the matter of their argument in a mild and gentle manner.

VERBOSITY, n. f. [verbosité, Fr. from verbosus.] Exuberance of words; much empty talk.

He draweth out the thread of his verbosity
Finer than the staple of his argument.

To give an hint more of the verbosities of this philosophy, a short view of a definition or two will be sufficient evidence.

Homer is guilty of verbosity, and of a tedious pro-lix manner of speaking; he is the greatest talker of all antiquity.

VERDANT, adj. [verdant, Fr. verdant, Lat.] Green. This word is so lately naturalized, that Skinner could find it only in a dictionary.

Each odorous bulby shrub
Fenc'd up by the verdant wall.

VERDIER, n. f. [verdier, Fr. viridarius, low Lat.] An officer in the forest.

VERDICT, n. f. [verum dictum, Lat.]

1. The determination of the jury declared to the judge.

Before the jury go together, 'tis all verdict
what the verdict shall be.
They have a longing desire to overrule, and to have the verdict pass for them, be it right or wrong.

2. Declaration; decision; judgment; opinion.

Deceived greatly they are, who think that all they whose names are cited among the verdicts of this age, and the verdict of the people.

They were sometimes condemned by the most natural verdict of common humanity; and so very gross and foul, that no man could pretend ignorance avoided.

A very likely matter, indeed, that the emperor should ask the Arians, whether they would be tried by the verdict of those who had before condemned the Arians by name.

VERDIGRINE, n. f. The rust of brass, which in time being consumed and eaten with tallow, turneth into green; in Latin arugo; in French vert de gris, or the hoary green.

Brass turned into green, is called verdigris.

VERDITER, n. f. Chalk made green.

Verditer ground with a weak gum arabic water, is the faintest and palest green.

VERDURE, n. f. [verdure, Fr.] Green;
green colour.

Its verdure clad
Her universal face with pleasant green.

Let twigs olive bind those laurels fast,
Whose verdure must for ever last.

VERDURIOUS, adj. [from verdure.] Green;
covered with green; decked with green.

Higher than their tops
The verdurous wall of paradise upspring;
Which to our general eye gave prospect large.

There the lowing herds chew verdurous pasture.

VERECUND, adj. [verecund, old Fr. ve-recundus, Lat.] Modest; bashful.

VERGE, n. f. [verge, Fr. virga, Lat.]

1. A rod, or something in form of a rod, carried as an emblem of authority.

The mace of a dean.

Suppose him now a dean complexion,
Devoutly holling in his seat.

The silver verge, with decent pride,
Stuck underneath his cushion side.

2. [vergo, Lat.] The brink; the edge;
the utmost border.

Would the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel to fear me to the brain.

I say, and will in battle prove,
Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge
That ever was survey'd by English eye.

You are old
Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her continuance.

Serve this as a flow'ry verge to land
The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud,
Lest it again dissolve, and flow'r the earth.

Let fortune empty her whole quiver on me,
I have a soul, that, like an ample shield,
Can take in all, and verge enough for more.

Every thing great, within the verge of nature, or out of it, has a proper part assigned it in this poem.

Then let him chuse a daimel young and fair,
To bless his age, and bring a worthy heir
To sooth his cure, and free from noise and strife,
Conduct him gently to the verge of life.

3. In law.

Verge is the compass about the king's court, bounding the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the king's household, and of the coroner of the king's house, and which term to have been 12 miles round.

Verge hath also another signification, and is used for a stick, or rod, whereby one is admitted tenant, and, holding it in his hand, sweareth fealty to the lord of the manor; who, for that reason, is called tenant by the verge.

Fear not; whom we raise,
We will make fast within a hallow'd verge.

To VERGE, v. n. [vergo, Lat.] To tend;
to bend downward.

They serve in the present for vessels to receive the verges, and for containers, in respect of the page-applying; and so much the more verging either way, according to the respective occasions.

The nearer I find myself coming to that period of life which is to be labour and sorrow, the more I poop myself upon those low supports that are left.

Such are indicated, when the juices of a human body verge to putrefaction.

Perhaps, as I second to some sphere unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal.

'Tis but a part we see, and not the whole.

VERGURE, n. f. [from verge.] He that carries the mace before the dean.

I can tip the verge with his crown, and set into the best seat.

VERIFICABLE, adj. [from verge.] Capable of being verified.

VERIFICATION, n. f. [from verge.] Confirmation by argument or evidence.

In verification of this we will mention a phrenomenon of our engine.

VERIFIER, n. f. [from verge.] One who assures a thing to be true.

To VERIFY, v. n. [verifier, Fr.] To justify against charge of falsehood; to confirm; to prove true.

What seemeth to have been uttered concerning sermons, and their efficacy or necessity, in regard of divine matter, must consequently be verified in fundry other kinds of teaching, if the matter be the same in all.

This is verified by a number of examples, that whatsoever is gained by an abusive treaty ought to be restored.

So shalt thou best fulfil, best verify
The prophets old, who sung thy endless reign.

So spake this oracle, then verified,
When Jesus, son of Mary, second Eve, Saw Satan fall.

Though you may mistake a year;
Though your prognosticks run too fast,
They must be verify'd at last.

Spain shall have three kings; which is now wonderfully verified; for besides the king of Portugal
there are now two rivals for Spain.

VERIFY, adv. [from verge.]

1. In truth; certainly.

Verify us better to be lowly born,
Than to be peck'd up in a glittering grief.

2. With great confidence.

It was truly thought, that had it not been for four great disavours of that voyage, the enterprise had succeeded.

By repeating the sacramental test, we are verify persuaded the consequence will be an entire alteration of religion among us.

VERISIMILAR, adj. [verisimilis, Lat.]

VERISIMILIOUS, adj. Probable; likely.

Many erroneous doctrines of peripatetics are,
in our days, wholly supported by verisimilious and probable reasons.

VERISIMILITUDE, n. f. [verisimilitudo,
Lat.] Probability; likelihood; resemblance of truth.

Touching the verisimilitude or probable truth of this relation, several reasons seem to overthrow it.

A noble nation, upon whom if not such verities,
at least such verisimilitudes of fortitude were placed.

Verisimilitude and opinion are an easy purchase, but true knowledge is dear and difficult. Like a point, it requires an acuteness to its discovery.

While verisimilitude, like the expanded superlatives, is obvious, sensible, and affords a large and easy field for loose enquiry.

The plot, the wit, the characters, the passions, are exalted as high as the imagination of the poet can carry them, with proportion to verisimilitude.

Though Horace gives permission to painters and poets to dare every thing, yet he encourages neither to make things out of nature and verisimilitude.

VERITABLE. adj. [veritable, Fr.] True; agreeable to fact.

Indeed! is't true?
—Must veritable; therefore look to't well.

The preface of the year succeeding made from apples in oak apples, is I doubt too indistinct, nor veritable from event.

VERITABLY. adv. [from veritable.] In a true manner.

VERITY. n. f. [veritas, Fr. veritas, Lat.] 1. Truth; consonance to the reality of things.

If any refuse to believe us disputing for the verity of things, let them believe God himself speaking for us.
I saw more than I drew; there was a noise; there was a voice.

The premisses of verisimilitude, and the fir and noise of passions that usually attend it, must needs be prejudicial to verity; its calm insinuations can no more be heard in such a bustle, than a whistle among a crowd of sailors in a storm.

It is a proposition of eternal verity, that none can govern while he is despised. We may as well imagine that there may be a king without majesty, a supreme without sovereignty.

2. A true assertion; a true tenet.

And that age, which my grey hairs make seem more than it is, hath not diminished in me the power to protect an undeniable verity.

Wherefore should any man think, but that reading itself is one of the ordinary means, whereby it pleases God, of his gracious goodness, to fulfil that celestial verity, which being but so received, is nevertheless effectual to save souls?

If there come truth from them, Why, by the verities on thee made good, May they not be my oracles as well?

Muti virtue be professed by a lie? Virtue and truth do ever best agree; By this it seems to be a verity.

Since the effects to good and virtuous be. 3. Moral truth; agreement of the words with the thoughts.

VERJUICE. n. f. [verjus, French.] Acid liquor expressed from crab-apples. It is vulgarly pronounced vargis.

Hang a dog upon a crab-tree, and he'll never love verjuice.

The barley-pudding comes in place: Then bids fall on; himself, for saving charges, A peel'd sic'd onion eats, and tipples verjuice.

The native verjuice of the crab, deriv'd Through th' infix'd gulf, a grateful mixture forms Offart and sweet.

VERMICELLI. n. f. [Italian.] A paste rolled and broken in the form of worms.

With oysters, eggs, and vermicelli, She let him almost burst his belly.

VERMICULAR. adj. [vermiculus, Latin.] Acting like a worm; continued from one part to another of the same body.

By the vermicular motion of the intestines, the grosser part are deriv'd downwards, while the finer are squeezed into the narrow orifices of the lacteal vessels.

TO VERMICULATE. v. a. [vermiculatus, Fr. vermiculatus, Lat.] To inlay; to work in chequer work, or pieces of divers colours.

VERMICULATION. n. f. [from vermiculatus.] Continuation of motion from one part to another.

My heart moves naturally by the motion of palpitation; my guts by the motion of vermiculation.

VERMICULE. n. f. [vermiculus, vermis, Lat.] A little grub, worm.

V E R

I saw the shining oak-ball ichneumon strike its terrible into many apples, to lay its eggs therein; and hence are many vermicules seen to issue the outside of these apples.

VERMICULOUS. adj. [vermiculosus, Lat.] Full of grubs; resembling grubs.

VERMIFORM. adj. [vermiformis, Fr. vermis and forma, Lat.] Having the shape of a worm.

VERMIFUGE. n. f. [from vermis and fugo, Lat.] Any medicine that destroys or expels worms.

VERMIL. n. f. [vermil, vermillion, VERMILION, Fr.] French.

1. The cochineal; a grub of a particular plant.

2. Factitious or native cinnabar; sulphur mixed with mercury. This is the usual, though not primitive, signification.

The imperfect metals are subject to rust, except mercury, which is made into vermillion by solution or calcination.

The fairest and most principal red is vermillion, called in Latin minium. It is a poison, and found where great flore of quicksilver is.

3. Any beautiful red colour.

How the red roses flush up in her cheeks, And the pure snow with goodly vermilion stain, Like crimson dy'd in grain.

There grew a goodly tree him fair beside, Laden with fruit and apples robe red.

As they in pure vermillion had been dy'd, Whereof great virtues over all were read.

Simple colours are strong and sensible, though they are clear as vermillion.

TO VERMILION. v. a. [from the noun.] To die red.

A slightly red vermillions all her face, And her eyes loughth with unusual grace.

VERMIN. n. f. [vermin, Fr. vermis, Latin.]

1. Any noxious animal. Used commonly for small creatures.

What is your study? — How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin.

The head of a wolf, dried and hanged up in a dove-house, will scare away vermin, such as weasels and polecats.

An idle person only lives to spend his time, and eat the fruits of the earth, like a vermin or a wolf.

A weazel taken in a trap was charged with misdemony, and the poor vermin stood much upon her innocence.

Great injuries these vermin, mice and rats, do in the field.

He that has so little wit To nourish vermin, may be hit.

2. It is used in contempt of human beings.

The stars determine You are my prisoners, base vermin.

TO VERMINATE. v. n. [from vermin.] To breed vermin.

Redi discarding anomalous generation, tried experiments relating to the vermination of serpents and flesh.

VERMINOUS. adj. [from vermin.] Tending to vermin; disposed to breed vermin.

A wasting of children's flesh depends upon some obstruction of the entrails, or verminous disposition of the body.

VERMIPAROUS. adj. [vermis and pario, Lat.] Producing worms.

Hereby they contound the generation of vermiparous animals with oviparous.

VERNACULAR. adj. [vernaculus, Lat.] Native; of one's own country.

V E R

London weekly bills number deep in cations; the same, likewise proving inseparable accidents to most other diseases; which influences do evidently bring a consumption under the notion of a vernacular disease to England.

The histories of all our former wars are translated to us in our vernacular idiom. I do not find in any of our chronicles, that Edward the third ever reconnoitred the enemy, though he often discovered the posture of the French, and as often vanquished them.

VERNAL. adj. [vernus, Lat.] Belonging to the spring.

With the year Seasons return; but not to me returns, Or light of vernal bloom, or summer's rose.

VERNANT. adj. [vernans, Lat.] Flourishing as in the spring.

Else had the spring Perpetual smil'd on earth, with vernal flowers, Equal in days and nights.

VERNILITY. n. f. [verna, Lat.] Servile carriage; the submissive fawning behaviour of a slave.

VERSABILITY. n. f. [versabilis, Lat.]

VERSABLENESS. n. f. [Aptness to be turned or wound any way.]

VERBAL. adj. [a cant word for unversal.] Total; whole.

Some, for brevity, Have cast the verbal world's nativity.

VERSATILE. adj. [versatilis, Lat.]

1. That may be turned round.

The adventurous pilot in a single year Learn'd his slate cock-boat dext'rously to steer,

Versatile, and sharp-piercing like a screw, Made good th' old passage, and still bore'd a new.

2. Changeable; variable.

One colour to us standing in one place, had a contrary aspect in another; as in those secret representations in the neck of a dove, and folks' scarlet.

3. Easily applied to a new task.

VERSATILENESS. n. f. [from versatile.]

VERSATILITY. n. f. [The quality of being versatile.]

Thou halt by moonlight at her window sung, With feigning voice, verses of feigning love.

2. [verset, Fr.] A section or paragraph of a book.

Thus far the questions proceed upon the construction of the first earth; in the following and they proceed upon the demolition of that earth.

3. Poetry; lays; metrical language.

Verse embalms virtue, and tombs and thrones of rhymes,

Preserve frail transitory fame as much As spice doth body from air's corrupt touch.

If envious eyes their hurtful rays have cast, More powerful verse shall free thee from the blast.

Whilst she did her various pow'r dispose, Virtue was taught in verse, and Athens' glory rose.

You compose In play-foot verse, or hobbling prose.

4. A piece of poetry.

This verse, my friend, be thine.

VERUSCLE. n. f. [versculus, Latin.] A little verse.

VERIFICATION. n. f. [verification, Fr. from verfify.] The art or practice of making verses.

Dance alone had your talent, but was not happy to arrive at your verification.

Some object to his verification; which is in poetry, what colouring is in painting, a beautiful ornament. But if the proportions are just, though the colours should happen to be rough, the piece may be of inestimable value.

VERIFICATOR. n. f. [verificatur, Fr. VERIFIER. n. f. [verificator, Latin.]

A versifier; a maker of verses with or without the spirit of poetry.

Status, the best verifiers next Virgil, knew not how to design after him.

In Job and the Psalms we shall find more sublime ideas, more elevated language, than in any of the heathen verifiers of Greece or Rome.

To VERIFY. v. n. [verifier, Fr. verficer, Lat.] To make verses.

You would wonder to hear how soon even children will begin to verify.

To follow rather the Goths in rhyming, than the Greeks in true verifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat bread among men.

I'll verify in spite, and do my best, To make as much waste paper as the rest.

To VERIFY. v. a. To relate in verse.

Unintermix'd with fictitious fables, I'll verify the truth, not poetize.

VERSION. n. f. [verfion, Fr. verfio, Lat.]

1. Change; transformation.

Springs, the antients thought to be made by the version of air into water.

2. Change of direction.

Comets are rather gazed upon, than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet, for magnitude, colour, series of the beams, produce what kind of effects.

3. Translation.

This exact propriety of Virgil I particularly regarded; but must confess, that I have not been able to make him appear wholly like himself. For where the original is close, no version can reach it on the same compass.

It will be as easy, nay much easier, to invent some pretence or other against the reading, version, or construction.

4. The act of translating.

VERT. n. f. [vert, Fr.]

Vert, in the laws of the forest, signifies every thing that grows, and bears a green leaf within the forest, that may cover and hide a deer.

I find no mention in all the records of Ireland, of a park or free warren, notwithstanding the great plenty of vert and venison.

VERTICAL. adj. [from vertebra, Lat.]

Relating to the joints of the spine.

The carotid, vertebral, and splenic arteries are not only variously connected, but here and there interlaced, to moderate the motion of the blood.

VERTEBRE. n. f. [vertebre, Fr. vertebra, Lat.] A joint of the back.

VER

The several vertebrae are so snugly compacted together, that they are as strong as if they were but one bone.

VERTIGO. n. f. [Lat.] A giddiness; a sense of turning in the head.

Vertigo is the appearance of visible objects that are without motion, as if they turned round, attended with a fear of falling, and a dimness of sight.

The forerunners of an apoplexy are dulness, vertigos, tremblings.

That old vertigo in his head

Will never leave him till he be dead.

VERYAIN. n. f. [vervaine, Fr. verbena, Lat.]

A plant.

The light-shade flows to work him ill,

Therewith the veryain, and her dill,

That hundred witchers of their will.

Some frost'ring pot-herbs here and there be found,

Which, cultivated with his daily care,

And bru'd with verroan, were his frugal fare.

VERYAIN mallow. n. f. A plant. It hath the whole habit of the mallow or althoe; but differs from it in having its leaves deeply divided.

VES

That with his very heart drippeth not

In very deed, as the Lord liveth.

O that in very deed we might behold it!

2. Having any qualities, commonly bad, in an eminent degree; complete; perfect; mere.

Those who had drunk of Circe's cup, were turned into very beasts.

There, where very desolation dwells,

By grots and caverns flagg'd with horrid shades,

She may pass on.

3. To note things emphatically, or eminently.

'Tis an ill office for a gentleman;

Especially against his very friend.

Was not my love

The verier wag o' th' two?

We can contain ourselves,

Were he the veriest antic in the world.

In a feigning age, the very knowledge of former times passes but for ignorance in a better dress.

The pictures of our great grandmothers in queen Elizabeth's time, are clothed down to the very wrists, and up to their very chin.

4. Same, emphatically.

Women are as roses, whose fair tincture

Being once display'd, doth full their beauty show.

The cocks beat the partridge, which she laid to heart; but finding their very cocks cutting one another, she comforted herself.

So catholic a grace is charity, that whatever time is the special opportunity of any other Christian grace, that very time is also the special opportunity of charity.

VERY. adv. In a great degree; in an eminent degree.

The Greek orator was so very famous for this, that his antagonist reading over the oration which had procured his banishment, asked them, if they were so much affected by the bare reading of it, how much more they would have been alarmed, had they heard him?

That bold challenge was thought very strange.

To VESICATE. v. a. [vesica, Lat.] To blister.

Celcus proposes, that in all these internal wounds, the external parts be opened, to make more powerful revulsion from within.

I saw the cuticular vesicated, and shining with a burning heat.

VESICATION. n. f. [from vesica.] Blistering; separation of the cuticle.

The Phenicians first invented open vessels, and the Egyptians ships with decks. Heylin.

The vessel is represented as stranded. The figure before it seems to lift it off the shallows. Addison.

From storms of rage, and dangerous rocks of pride,

Let thy strong hand this little vessel guide;
It was thy hand that made it: through the tide

Impetuous of this life let thy command
Direct my course and bring me safe to land. Prior.

Now secure the pointed vessel glides;
The sun-beams trembling on the floating tides. Pope.

4. Any capacity; any thing containing.

I have my fill
Of knowledge, what this vessel can contain. Milton.

5. [In theology.] One relating to God's household.

If the rigid doctrines be found apt to cool all those men's love of God, who have not the confidence to believe themselves of the number of the few chosen vessels, and to beget security and presumption in others who have conquered those difficulties. Hammond.

TO VE'SSEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a vessel; to barrel.

Take earth, and vessel it, and in that set the seed. Bacon.

VE'SSETS. n. f. A kind of cloth commonly made in Suffolk. Bailey.

VE'SSION. n. f. [among horsemen.] A windgall, or soft swelling on the inside and outside of a horse's hoof. Dart.

VEST. n. f. [vestis, Latin.] An outer garment.

Over his lucid arms
A military vest of purple flow'd. Milton.

When the queen in royal habit's dress,
Old mystick emblems grace th' imperial vest. Smith.

TO VEST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress; to deck; to enrobe.

The verdant fields with those of heav'n may vie,
With either vest, and a purple sky. Dryden.

Light! Nature's resplendent robe;
Without whose vesting beauty all were wrapt
In gloom. Thomson.

2. To dress in a long garment.

Just Simon and prophetic Anna spoke,
Before the altar and the vested priest. Milton.

3. To make possessor of; to invest with: it has with before the thing possessed.

To settle men's consciences, 'tis necessary that they know the person who by right is vested with power over them. Locke.

VET

Had I been vested with the monarch's pow'r, Thou must have sigh'd, unlucky youth! in vain. Prior.

4. To place in possession: with in before the possessor.

The militia their commissioners positively required to be entirely vested in the parliament. Clarendon.

Empire and dominion was vested in him, for the good and behoof of others. Locke.

VE'STAL. n. f. [vestalis, Lat.] A virgin consecrated to Vesta; a pure virgin.

Women are not
In their best fortunes strong; but want will perjure
The ne'er-touch'd vestal. Shakespeare.

How happy is the blameless vestal's lot!
The world forgetting, by the world forgot. Pope.

VE'STAL. adj. [vestalis, Lat.] Denoting pure virginity.

Her vestal livery is but sick and green,
And none but fools do wear it. Shakespeare.

VESTIBULE. n. f. [vestibulum, Latin.] The porch or first entrance of a house.

VESTIGE. n. f. [vestigium, Lat.] Footstep; mark left behind in passing.

The truth passes so slightly through men's imaginations, that they must use great subtilty to track its vestige. Harvey.

VESTMENT. n. f. [vestimentum, Latin.] Garment; part of dress.

Were it not better that the love which men bear unto God should make the least things that are employed in his service amiable, than that their over-scrupulous dislike of so mean a thing as a vestment, should from the very service of God withdraw their hearts and affections? Hooker.

Heaven then would seem thy image, and reflect Those subtle vestments, and that bright aspect. Waller.

The sculptors could not give vestments suitable to the quality of the persons represented. Dryden.

VE'STRY. n. f. [vestiaire, Fr. vestiarium, Latin.]

1. A room appendant to the church, in which the sacerdotal garments and consecrated things are deposited.

Bold Ameyus from the robb'd vestry brings
The chalices of heav'n; and holy things
Of precious weight. Dryden.

2. A parochial assembly commonly convened in the vestry.

They create new venetors, vestry elders, without any commendment of the world. White.

The common-council are chosen every year, so many for every parish, by the vestry and common convention of the people of that parish. Clarendon.

Go with me where pultry confablers will not summon us to vestries. Blount.

VE'STURE. n. f. [vesture, old Fr. vestura, Italian.]

1. Garment; robe.

Her breasts half hid, and half were laid to show;
Her envious vesture greedy sight repelling. Fairf.

What, weep you when you but behold
Our Cæsar's vesture wounded? Shakespeare.

To bear my lady's train, lest the base earth
Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss. Shaks.

Here ruddy breasts and gold resplendent blaz'd;
There polish'd chests embroder'd vestures grac'd. Pope.

2. Dress; habit; external form.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings;
But this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close us in, we cannot hear it. Shakespeare.

Rocks, precipices, and gulfs, apparel'd with a vesture of plants, would resemble mountains and vallies. Bentley.

VETCH. n. f. [vicia, Lat.] A plant with a papilionaceous flower, producing a legume.

VEX

Where oxen, pulch, and tares have feed,
And stalks of lupines grow, Dryden.

An ervum is a sort of vetch, or small pea. Arbuthnot.

VE'TCHY. adj. [from vetch.] Made of vetches; abounding in vetches; consisting of vetch or pea-straw.

If to my cottage thou wilt resort,
There may'st thou linge in a vetchy bed,
Till fairer fortune show forth his head. Spenser.

VE'TERAN. n. f. [vetcranus, Lat.] An old soldier; a man long practised in any thing.

The Arians, for the credit of their faction, took the eldest, the best experienced, the most wary, and the longest practised veterans they had amongst them. Harley.

If King Charles II. had made war upon France, he might have conquered it by the many veterans which had been inured to service in the civil wars. Addison.

Ensigns that pierc'd the foe's remotest lines,
The hardy veteran with tears resigns. Addison.

We were forced to uncover, or be regarded as veterans in the bear monde. Addison.

VE'TERAN. adj. Long practised in war, long experienced.

There was a mighty strong army of land-forces, to the number of fifty thousand veteran soldiers. Hume.

The British youth shall hail thy wife consoled, Thy temper'd ardour, and thy veteran skill. Tomlinson.

VETERINARIAN. n. f. [veterinarius, Lat.] One skilled in the diseases of cattle.

That a horse has no gall, is not only swallowed by common farriers, but also received by good veterinarians, and some who have laudably courted upon horses. Brace.

TO VEX. v. a. [vero, Lat.]

1. To plague; to torment; to harass.

Do you think
The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd? Shakspeare.

Do poor Tom some charity, whom the traiters vexed. Shakspeare.

When she pressed him daily, to that his love was vexed unto death, he told her all his heart. Joens.

Still may the dog the wand'ring troops constrain
Of airy ghosts, and vex the guilty train. Dryden.

You are the cause of all my care
Your eyes ten thousand dangers dart,
Ten thousand torments vex my heart;
I love, and I despair. Pope.

2. To disturb; to disquiet.

Alack, 'tis he; why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vex'd sea, singing aloud. Shakespeare.

Rang'd on the banks, beneath our equal sky,
White curling waves, and the vex'd ocean roars. Pope.

3. To trouble with slight provocations.

TO VEX. v. n. To fret; to be on tenter; to be uneasy.

Ulysses gave good care, and fed
And drunk his wine, and vex, and revell'd
His food for mere vexation. Chapman.

VE'XATION. n. f. [from vex.]

1. The act of troubling.

O that husband,
My supreme crown of grief, and those repeated vexations of it! Shakespeare.

2. The state of being troubled; uneasiness; sorrow.

Vexation almost stops my breath,
That fondred friends greet in the hour of death. Shakespeare.

Passions too violent, instead of heightening our pleasures, afford us nothing but vexation and pain. Temple.

3. The cause of trouble or uneasiness.

Your children were vexation to your youth:
But mine shall be a comfort to your age. Shakspeare.

4. An act of harassing by law.

Albeit the party grieved thereby may have some reason to complain of an untrue charge, yet may he not well call it an unjust vexation. Bacon.

5. A slight teasing trouble.

VEXATIOUS, adj. [from vexation.]

1. Afflictive; troublesome; causing trouble.

Consider him maintaining his usurped title by continual vexations wars against the kings of Judah. South.

Vexations thought still found my flying mind,
Nor bound by limits, nor to place confin'd;
Haunted my nights, and terrified my days;
Stalk'd through my gardens, and pursu'd my ways;
Nor shut from artful bow'rs, nor lost in winding maze. Prior.

2. Full of trouble; full of uneasiness.

He leads a vexatious life, who in his noblest actions is so gored with scruples, that he dares not make a step without the authority of another. Digby.

3. Teasing; slightly troublesome.

VEXATIONOUSLY, adv. [from vexatious.]

Troublesomely; uneasily.

VEXATIONOUSNESS, n. f. [from vexatious.]

Troublesomeness; uneasiness.

VEXER, n. f. [from tex.] He who vexes.

UGLYLY, adv. [from ugly.] Filthily; with deformity; in such a manner as to raise dislike.

UGLINESS, n. f. [from ugly.]

1. Deformity; contrariety to beauty.

All that else seem'd fair and fresh in sight,
Was turn'd now to dreadful ugliness. Spenser.
She takes her topicks from the advantages of old age and ugliness. Dryden.

2. Turpitude; loathsomeness; moral depravity.

Their dull ribaldry cannot but be very nauseous and offensive to any one, who does not, for the sake of the sin itself, pardon the ugliness of its circumstances. South.

UGLY, adj. [This word was anciently written ougly; whence Dier ingeniously deduces it from ouphlike; that is, like an ouph, elph, or goblin. In Saxon oga is terrous; and in Gothick ogan is to fear.] Deformed; offensive to the sight; contrary to beautiful; hateful.

It Caffio do remain,

He hath a daily beauty in his life, That makes me ugly. Shakespeare.

O, I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams. Shalup.

Was this the cottage, and the tale above?

Thou toldst me of? What grim aspects are there,
These ugly-headed monsters? Milton.

VIAL, n. f. [from vas.] A small bottle.

You gods! look down,

And from your sacred vials pour your grace
Upon my daughter's head. Shakespeare.

Take thou this vial, being then in bed,
And this distilled liquor drink thou off. Shakespeare.

Another lump burnt in an old marble sepulchre belonging to some of the ancient Romans inclosed in a glass vial. Wallis.

I placed a thin vial, well stopp'd up, within the smoke of the vapour, but nothing followed. Addison.

Chemical waters, that are each transparent,
when separate, ferment into a thick troubled liquor, when mixed in the same vial. Addison.

TO VIAL, v. a. To enclose in a vial.

This she with precious ointments liquors heals;
For which the shepherds, at the festivals,
Carol her goodness loud in rustic lays. Milton.

VIAL, n. f. [from viande, French; vivanda, Italian.] Food; meat dressed.

The belly only like a gulf remain'd,
I'th' midst of the body idle and unactive;
Still cupboarding the viand. Shakespeare.

No matter, since
They've left their viands behind, for we have stomachs.

Will't please you taste of what is here? Shalup.

These are not fruits forbidden; no interdiction
Defends the touching of these viands pure;
Their taste no knowledge works, at least of evil. Milton.

From some sorts of food less pleasant to the taste, persons in health, and in no necessity of using such viands, had better to abstain. Ray.

The tables in fair order spread;
Viands of various kinds allure the taste,
Of choicest food and savour; rich repast. Pope.

VIATICUM, n. f. [Latin.]

1. Provision for a journey.

2. The last rites used to prepare the passing soul for its departure.

TO VIBRATE, v. a. [from tribro, Latin.]

1. To brandish; to move to and fro with quick motion.

2. To make to quiver.

Breath vocalized, that is, vibrated or undulated, may differently affect the lips, and impress a swift tremulous motion, which breath passing smooth doth not. Holder.

TO VIBRATE, v. n.

1. To play up and down, or to and fro.

The air, compressed by the fall and weight of the quicksilver, would repel it a little upwards, and make it vibrate a little up and down. Hooke.

Do not all fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light, and flame? And is not this emission performed by the vibrating motions of their parts? Newton.

2. To quiver.

The whisper that to greatness still too near,
Perhaps, yet vibrates on his sovereign's ear. Pope.

VIBRATION, n. f. [from tribro, Lat.] The act of moving or state of being moved with quick reciprocations, or returns;
the act of quivering.

It sparkled like the coal upon the altar, with the fervours of piety, the heats of devotion, and the flicks and vibrations of an harmonious activity. South.

Do not the rays of light, in falling upon the bottom of the eye, excite vibrations in the tunica retina? which vibrations being propagated along the solid fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, cause the sense of seeing. Newton.

Mild vibrations sooth the parted soul,
New to the dawning of celestial day. Thomson.

VICAR, n. f. [from vicarius, Latin.]

1. The incumbent of an appropriated or impropriated benefice.

Procure the vicar
To stay for me at church, 'twixt twelve and one,
To give our hearts united ceremony. Shakespeare.

Your is the price,
The vicar my defeat, and all the village see. Dryden.

A landed youth, whom his mother would never suffer to look into a book for fear of spoiling his eyes, upon hearing the clergy decreed, what a contempt must he entertain, not only for his vicar at home, but for the whole order! Swift.

2. One who performs the functions of another; a substitute.

An archbishop may not only excommunicate and interdict his suffragans, but his vicar general may do the same. Aylmer.

VICARAGE, n. f. [from vicar.] The benefice of a vicar.

This gentleman lived in his vicarage to a good old age, and having never defiled his flock, died vicar of Bray. Swift.

VICARIOUS, adj. [from vicarius, Latin.] Deputed; delegated; acting in the place of another.

The soul in the body is but a subordinate efficient, and vicarious and instrumental in the hands of the Almighty, being but his substitute in this regiment of the body. Hale.

What can be more unnatural, than for a man to rebel against the vicarious power of God in his soul? Norris.

VICARSHIP, n. f. [from vicar.] The office
of a vicar.

VICE, n. f. [from vitium, Latin.]

1. The course of action opposite to virtue; depravity of manners; inordinate life.

No spirit more good to love

Vice for itself. Addison.

The foundation of error will lie in wrong measures of probability; as the foundation of vice in wrong measures of good. Locke.

2. A fault; an offence. It is generally used for an habitual fault, not for a single enormity.

No vice, so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue on its outward parts. Shalup.

Yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before;
More suffer by him that shall succeed. Shakespeare.

Where the excess and defect do make vices, or such things as ought not to be, there the mediocrity must denote something that ought to be, and consequently must be a virtue. Hickins.

Ingovern'd appetite, a brutish vice. Milton.

I cannot blame him for investigating so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.

Proud vices and vain desires in our worldly employments, are as truly vices and corruptions, as hypocrisy in prayer, or vanity in alms. Law.

3. The fool, or punchinello of old fables.

I'll be with you again
In a trice, like to the old vice,
Your need to sustain; Who with dagger of lath, in his rage and his wrath.
Cries, Ah, ha! to the devil. Shakespeare.

His face made of brim, like a vice in a game. Tupper.

4. [trij, Dutch.] A kind of small iron prels with screws, used by workmen.

He found that marbles taught him percussion;
bottle-screws, the vice; whirling, the axis in peri-trochio. Arbuthnot and Pope.

5. Gripe; grasp.

If I but hit him once; if he come but within my vice. Shakespeare.

6. [vice, Latin.] It is used in composition for one, qui vicem gerit, who performs, in his stead, the office of a superior, or who has the second rank in command;
as, a viceroy, viceregent, &c.

TO VICE, v. a. [from the noun.] To draw by a kind of violence.

With all confidence he swears,
As he had seen't, or been an instrument
To see you to't, that you have touch'd his queen Forbiddenly. Shakespeare.

VICEDMIRAL, n. f. [vice and admiral.]

1. The second commander of a fleet.

The first most of the fleet was the admiral; the second admiral was Carr Mahometes, an arch pirate.
The vicedmiral in the middle of the fleet, with a great squadron of galleys, struck sail directly. Kneller.

2. A naval officer of the second rank.

VICEDMIRALTY, n. f. [from vicedmiral.]

The office of a vicedmiral.

The vicedmiralty is exercised by Mr. Trevanion. Carver.

VICAGENT, n. f. [vice and agent.] One who acts in the place of another.

A valiant Satan hath made his vicagent, to cross whatever the faithful ought to do. Hooker.

VICEROCHANCELLOR, n. f. [from vicereceptorius, Latin.] The second magistrate of the universities.

VICED, adj. [from vice.] Vicious; corrupt.

Not used.

Be as a planetary plague, when Love
Will o'er some high vic'd city hang his poison.
In the sick air. Shakespeare.

VICIGERENCY, n. f. [from vicigerent.]

The office of a vicigerent; lieutenantancy;
deputed power.

The authority of conscience stands founded upon its vicigerency and deputation under God. South.

VIC

VICEGERENT. n. f. [vicarius gerens, Lat.]

A lieutenant; one who is intrusted with the power of the superior, by whom he is deputed.

All precepts concerning kings are comprehended in these: remember thou art a man; remember thou art God's vicegerent.

Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God; in unshaken duty to his vicegerent; in hearty obedience to his church.

Great Father of the gods, when for our crimes Thou send'st some heavy judgment on the times; Some tyrant king, the terror of his age, The type and true vicegerent of thy rage, Thus punish.

VICEGERENT. adj. [vicegerens, Latin.]

Having a delegated power; acting by substitution.

Whom send I to judge thee? Whom but thee, Vicegerent Son! To thee I have transfer'd All judgment, whether in heav'n, or earth, or hell.

VICENARY. adj. [vicenarius, Latin.]

Belonging to twenty.

VICEROY. n. f. [viceroi, French.]

He who governs in place of the king with regal authority.

Shall I, for lure of the rest unvanquish'd, Detract so much from that prerogative, As to be call'd but viceroi of the whole?

Mendoza, viceroi of Peru, was wont to say, that the government of Peru was the best place the king of Spain gave, save that it was somewhat too near Madrid.

We are so far from having a king, that even the viceroi is generally absent four fifths of his time.

VICEROYALTY. n. f. [from viceroi.]

Dignity of a viceroi.

These parts furnish our viceroialties for the grandees; but in war are incumbrances to the kingdom.

VICTY. n. f. [Of this word I know not well the meaning or original: a nice thing is now called in vulgar language, point vice, from the French point de vice, or point de vice; whence the barbarous word nicety may be derived.]

Nicety; exactness. A word not used.

Here is to the fruit of Pemm, Grafted upon Stub his stem; With the peaskish nicety.

And old Sherwood's nicety.

VICINAGE. n. f. [vicinia, Lat.]

Neighbourhood; places adjoining.

VICINAL. adj. [vicinus, Latin.]

Near; neighbouring.

VICINE. s. neighbouring.

Opening other vicine passages might obliterate any track; as the making of one hole in the yielding mud defaces the print of another near it.

VICINITY. n. f. [vicinus, Latin.]

1. Nearness; state of being near.

The position of things is such, that there is a vicinity between agents and patients, that the one incessantly invades the other.

The abundance and vicinity of country fears.

VICINITY. n. f. [vicinus, Latin.]

2. Neighbourhood.

He shall find out and recall the wandering particles home, and fix them in their old vicinity.

Gravity alone must have carried them downwards to the vicinity of the sun.

VICIOUS. adj. [from vice.]

See VITIOUS. Devoted to vice; not addicted to virtue.

He heard this heavy charge, Servants of servants, on his vicious race.

VICISSITUDE. n. f. [vicissitudo, Latin.]

1. Regular change; return of the same things in the same succession.

VIC

It makes through heav'n's Grateful vicissitude, like day and night.

The rays of light are alternately disposed to be reflected or refracted for many vicissitudes.

This succession of things upon the earth, is the result of the vicissitude of seasons, and is as constant as is the cause of that vicissitude, the sun's declination.

2. Revolution; change.

During the course of the war, did the vicissitudes of good and bad fortune affect us with humility or thankfulness.

Verse sweetens toil, however rude the found. All at her work the hollower maiden sings; Nor, as she turns the giddy wheel around, Revolves the sad vicissitude of things.

VI'CONTIELS. In law, vicintiel rents are certain farms for which the sheriff pays a rent to the king, and makes what profit he can of them.

Vicintiel writs are such writs as are triable in the county court, before the sheriff.

VI'TIM. n. f. [vicitima, Latin.]

1. A sacrifice; something slain for a sacrifice.

All that were authors of so black a deed, Be sacrific'd as victims to his ghost. And on the victim pour the ruddy wine.

Clitumnus' waves, for triumphs after war, The victim ox, and snowy sheep prepare.

2. Something destroyed.

Behold where ego's wretched victim lies; See his head trembling, and his half-clos'd eyes.

VICTOR. n. f. [vicitor, Latin.]

1. Conqueror; vanquisher; he that gains the advantage in any contest. Victor is seldom used with a genitive; we say the conqueror of kingdoms, not the victor of kingdoms; and never but with regard to some single action or person: as we never say, Cæsar was in general a great victor, but that he was victor at Pharsalia. We rarely say Alexander was victor of Darius, though we say he was victor at Arbela; but we never say he was victor of Persia.

This strange race more strange conceits did yield; Who victor seem'd, was to his ruin brought; Who seem'd o'erthrown, was mistress of the field.

Some time the flood prevails, and then the wind, Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast, Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered.

Although the victor, we submit to Cæsar.

Say where and when

Their fight; what stroke shall bruise the victor's heel.

Our Hebrew songs and harps in Babylon, That pleas'd so well our victor's ear, declare That rather Greece from us these arts deriv'd.

Their hearts at last the vanquish'd re-assume, And now the victors fall.

In love, the victors from the vanquish'd fly; They fly that wound, and they pursue that die.

Fortune's unjust; the ruins of the brave, And him who should be victor, makes the slave.

Lose not a thought on me, I'm out of danger; Heaven will not leave me in the victor's hand.

2. Pope has used this word in a manner perhaps unauthorized.

There, victor of his health, his fortune, friends, And fame, this lord of useless thousands ends.

VICTORIOUS. adj. [vicitorius, French.]

1. Conquering; having obtained conquest; superiour in contest.

Victory doth more often fall by error of the vanquish'd, than by the valour of the victorious.

VIE

The Sea-king's victorious with his ships.

That happy son, said he, will rise again, Who twice victorious did our navy see: And I alone must view him rise in vain.

Without one ray of all his stars for us.

2. Producing conquest.

Sudden their honours shall be snatch'd away, And cut for ever this victorious day.

3. Betokening conquest.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths; Our bruised arms hung up for monuments.

VICTORIOUSLY. adv. [from victorious.] With conquest; successfully; triumphantly.

That grace will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, victoriously through all difficulties.

VICTORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from victorious.]

The state or quality of being victorious.

VICTORY. n. f. [victria, Lat.]

Conquest; success in contest; triumph.

At his nurse's tears He whin'd and roar'd away your victory, That pages blush'd at him.

Then to the heaven of heavens he shall ascend, With victory, triumphing o'er his foes.

Obedience is a complicated act of virtue, and many graces are exercised in one act of obedience. It is an act of humility, of mortification, and redemption, of charity to God, of care of the publick, of order and charity to ourselves. It is a great instance of a victory over the most refractory passions.

VICTRESS. n. f. [from victor.]

A female that conquers. Not used. I'll lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed; And she shall be sole victress; Cæsar's wife.

VICTUAL. n. f. [vicuailles, French,

VICTUALS. s. vittonaglia, Italian.] Provision of food; stores for the support of life; meat; sustenance.

Chapman has written it as it is colloquially pronounced.

He landed in these islands, to furnish himself with victuals and fresh water.

You had musty victuals, and he hath left to eat it: he hath an excellent stomach.

A huge great flagon full I bore, And, in a good large knapsack, cut the store.

He was not able to keep that place three days for lack of victual.

They, unprovided of tackling and victuals, are forced to sea by a storm.

TO VICTUAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

To store with provision for food.

I must go victual Orleans forthwith.

VICTUALLER. n. f. [from victuals.]

1. One who provides victuals.

They planted their artillery against the haven, to impeach supply of victuals; yet the English victuallers surceased not to bring all things necessary.

Their conquest half is to the victualler due.

2. One who keeps a house of entertainment.

VIDELICET. adv. [Lat.] To wit; that is. This word is generally written viz.

VIDUITY. n. f. [from viduus, Lat.] Widowhood.

To VIE. v. a. [Of this word the etymology is very uncertain.]

1. To show or practise in competition. They vie power and expence with those that are too high.

V I E

9. Is this passage the meaning seems to be, to add; to accumulate.

She hung round my neck, and kiss'd and kiss'd me to his fall.

That is a trick she won me to her love. Shaksp.
To VIZ. v. n. To contest; to contend; to strive for superiority.

In a trading nation, the younger sons may be placed in such a way of life, as may enable them to rise with the best of their family. Addison.

The wool, when dyed with Ancona's dye, lay with the proudest Tyrian purple vic. Addison.
Now voices over voices rise;
While each to be the loudest vies. Swift.

To VIEW. v. a. [veu, Fr. from veoir, or voir.]

1. To survey; to look on by way of examination.

Go, and view the country. Joshua.
Th' almighty Father bent down his eye,
His own works and their works at once to view. Milton.

View not this spire by measures giv'n
To buildings rais'd by common hands. Prior.
Whene'er we view fons well-proportion'd dome,
No single parts unequally surprise;
All comes united to th' admiring eyes. Pope.

2. To see; to perceive by the eye.
They here with eyes aghast View'd first their lamentable lot. Milton.

No more I hear, no more I view;
The phantom flies me, as unkind as you. Pope.

VIEW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Prospect.
You should tread a course Pretty, and full of view; yes, haply, near
The residence of Posthumus. Shakspere.

Vast and indefinite views, which drown all apprehensions of the uttermost objects, are condemned by good authors. Wotton.

The walls of Pluto's palace are in view. Dryd.
Cut wide views through mountains to the plain,
You'll with your hill a shelter'd hill again. Pope.

2. Sight; power of beholding.
I go, to take for ever from your view,
Both the lov'd object, and the hated too. Dryden.

These things duly weighed, will give us a clear view into the state of human liberty. Locke.

Instruct me other joys to prize,
With other beauties charm my partial eyes;
Full in my view let all the bright abode,
And make my soul quit Abelard for God. Pope.

3. Intellectual sight; mental ken.
Some safer resolution I've in view. Milton.

4. Act of seeing.
Th' unexpected sound
Of dogs and men, his wakeful ear does wound;
Rous'd with the noise, he scarce believes his ear,
Willing to think th' illusions of his fear
Had giv'n this false alarm; but straight his view
Confirms that more than all he fears is true. Deuham.

5. Sight; eye.
Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote. Locke.

6. Survey; examination by the eye.
Time never will renew,
While we too far the pleasing path pursue,
Surveying nature with too nice a view. Dryden.

7. Intellectual survey.
If the mind has made this inference by finding out the intermediate ideas, and taking a view of the connection of them, it has proceeded rationally. Locke.

8. Space that may be taken in by the eye;
reach of sight.
The same through all the neighb'ring nations flow,
When now the Trojan navy was in view. Dryden.

9. Appearance; show.
In that accomplish'd mind,
Help'd by the night, new graces find;
Which, by the splendour of her view
Dazzled, before we never knew. Wallor.

V I G

10. Display; exhibition to the sight or mind.

To give a right view of this mistaken part of liberty, would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wife considerations than a wife man? Locke.

11. Prospect of interest.
No man sets himself about any thing, but upon some view or other, which serves him for a reason. Locke.

12. Intention; design.
He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees to the state of things at home; with that view he makes all his reflections. Atterbury.

With a view to commerce, in returning from his expedition against the Parthians, he passed through Egypt. Arbutnot.

Either, the Jesuit, in the year 1686, recorded the cardinal in the same place, and upon the same views. Waterland.

Milton.

Shrines! where their vigils pale-eyed virgins keep,
And pitying saints, whose statues learn to weep. Pope.

2. A fast kept before a holiday.
He that outlives this day, and fees old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say, to-morrow is St. Crispian. Shakspere.

And that, which on the Baptist's vigil lends
To nymphs and twins the vision of their friends. Harte.

3. Service used on the night before a holiday.
No altar is to be consecrated without reliques, which placed before the church door, the vigils are to be celebrated that night before them. Stillingfleet.

The rivals call my mate another way,
To sing their vigils for th' ensuing day. Dryden.

4. Watch; forbearance of sleep.
Though Venus and her son should spare
Her rebel heart, and never teach her care;
Yet Hymen may perform her vigils keep,
And for another's joy suspend her sleep. Waller.

Nothing wears out a fine face like the vigils of the card-table, and those cutting passions which attend them. Addison.

VIGILANCE. } n. f. [vigilance, Fr. vigi- VIGILANCY. } lancia, Lat.]

1. Forbearance of sleep.
Ulysses yielded unfeignably to sleep, and the strong passion for his country should have given him vigilance. Broome.

2. Watchfulness; circumspection; incessant care.
Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,
Your deeds of war, and all our counsel die? Shaksp.

In this their military care, there were few remarkable occasions under the duke, saving his continual vigilance, and voluntary hazard of his person. Wotton.

Of these the vigilance
I dread; and to elude, thus wrapp'd in mist
Of midnight vapour, glide obscure. Milton.

V I L

We are enabled to subdue all other creatures; and use for our benefit the strength of these, the sagacity and vigilancy of the dog. Ray.

3. Guard; watch.
No post is free, no place,
That guard and moist mind, Shakspere.
Does not attend my taking. Shakspere.

In at this gate none pass
The vigilance here plac'd, but such as come
Well known from heav'n. Milton.

VIGILANT. adj. [vigilans, Lat.] Watchful; circumspect; diligent; attentive.

They have many prayers, but every of them very short, as if they were darts thrown out with a kind of sudden quickness; lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be waded or dulled through continuance. Hooker.

Take your places, and be vigilant;
If any noise or soldier you perceive,
Let us have knowledge. Shakspere.

The treasurer, as he was vigilant in such cases, had notice of the clerk's expiration so soon, that he procured the king to find a message to the master of the rolls. Charendon.

VIGILANTLY. adv. [from vigilant.]
Watchfully; attentively; circumspectly.

The earth's attractive vigour to explain! Blackmore.

VILE. adj. [vil, Fr. vilis, Latin.]
1. Base; mean; worthless; sordid; despicable.

Our wife were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God, were in his sight so vile and despicable as men's disdainful speech would make it. Hooker.

VIL

I disclaim scorn'd, and scorn'd death,
Rather than I would be so vile. Shaksp.
He to-day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother; be he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition. Shaksp.
O ye Pegasus nymphs, that, hating vile things, delight in lofty hills, and in delicious springs!
Drayton.

The inhabitants account gold but as a vile thing. Abbot.

That sinful creature man elected is,
And in our place the heavens possess he must;
Vile man, begot of clay, and born of dust. Fairfax.

A spontaneous production is against matter of fact; a thing without example not only in man, but the vilest of weeds. Bentley.

2. Morally impure; wicked.

Restor'd by thee, vile as I am, to place
Of new acceptance. Milton.

VILED. adj. [from vile; whence revile.]

He granted life to all except to one, who had used vile speeches against king Edward. Hayward.

VILELY. adv. [from vile.] Basely; meanly; shamefully.

The Volscians vilely yielded the town. Shaksp.
How can I

Forget my Hector, treated with dishonour, Depriv'd of funeral rites, and vilely dragg'd,
A bloody corse, about the walls of Troy? A. Philips.

VILENESS. n. f. [from vile.]

1. Baseness; meanness; despicableness.

His vileness us shall never awe:
But here our sports shall be,
Such as the golden world first saw,
Most innocent and free. Drayton.

Reflect on the essential vileness of matter, and its impotence to confer its own being. Creech.

Considering the vileness of the clay, I wondered that no tribune of that age durst ever venture to ask the potter, What dost thou make? Swift.

2. Moral or intellectual baseness.

Then, vileness of mankind!
Could none, alas! repeat me good or great,
Wash my pale body, or bewail my fate? Prior.
VILIFY. n. f. [from vilify.] One that vilifies.

To VILIFY. v. a. [from vile.]

1. To debase; to degrade; to make vile.

Their maker's image
Forsook them, when themselves they vilify'd
To serve ungovern'd appetite, and took His image whom they serv'd. Milton.

2. To defame; to make contemptible.

Tonatin could not abide
To hear his sovereign vilify'd. Drayton.
The displeasure of their prince, those may exa small collection of houses. Little in use.

This book gives an account of the manurable lands in every manor, town, or vill. Hale.

VILLA. n. f. [villa, Lat.] A country seat.
The ancient Romans lay the foundations of their villas and palaces within the very borders of the sea. Addison.

At six hours distance from Bysantium's walls,
Where Bosphorus into the Euxine falls,
In a gay district, call'd th' Elysian vale,
A furnish'd villa stands, propos'd for sale. Harte.

All vast possessions; just the same the case,
Whether you call them villa, park, or chase. Pope.

VILLAGE. n. f. [village, Fr.] A small collection of houses in the country, less than a town.

Beggars, with roaring voices, from low farms,
Or peeping villages, sheep coats, and mills,
Inforce their charity. Shaksp.

The early village cock
Hath twice done salutation to the morn. Shaksp.

VIL

gave.

In the vile habit of a village slave. Pope.

VILLAGER. n. f. [from village.] An inhabitant of the village.

Brutus had rather be a villager,
Than to repute himself a son of Rome
Under such hard conditions. Shaksp.

When once her eye
Hath met the virtue of this innaght dust,
I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear. Milt.

If there are conveniences of life, which common use reaches not, it is not reason to reject them, because every villager doth not know them. Locke.

VILLAGERY. n. f. [from village.] District of villages.

Robin Goodfellow, are you not he
That fright the maidens of the villagery? Shaksp.

VILLAGIN. n. f. [villain, Fr. villanus, low
Latin.]

1. One who held by a base tenure.

The Irish inhabiting the lands fully conquered, being in condition of slaves and villains, did render a greater revenue than if they had been made the king's free subjects. Davies.

2. A wicked wretch.

We were prevented by a dozen armed knights, or rather villains, who, using this time of their extreme feebleness, all together let upon them. Sidney.

O villain! villain! his very opinion in the letter.
Abhor'd villain! unnatural, detested, brutish villain! Shaksp.

What in the world,
That names me traitor, villain-like he lies. Shaksp.

He was stabbed to the heart by the hand of a villain, upon the mere impious pretence of his being odious to the parliament. Clarendon.

Calm thinking villains, whom no faith could fix;
Of crooked counsels, and dark politics. Pope.

VILLANAGE. n. f. [from villain.]

1. The state of a villain; base servitude.

They exercise most bitter tyranny
Upon the parts brought into their bondage:
No wretchedness is like to sinful villanage. Spenser.
Upon every such surrender and grant, there was but one freeholder, which was the lord himself;
all the rest were but tenants in villanage, and were not fit to be sworn in juries. Davies.

2. Baseness; infamy.

If in thy smoke it ends, their glories shine;
But infamy and villanage are thine. Dryden.

To VILLANIZE. v. a. [from villain.] To debase; to degrade; to defame.

Were virtue by descent, a noble name
Could never villanize his father's fame;
But, as the first, the last of all the line,
Would, like the sun, even in descending shine. Dryden.

These are the fools, whose solidity can baffle all arguments; whose glory is in their shame, in the debasing and villanizing of mankind to the condition of beasts. Bentley.

VILLANOUS. adj. [from villain.]

1. Base; vile; wicked.

2. Sorry; in a familiar sense.

Thou art my son; I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chiefly a villanous trick of thine eye doth warrant me. Shaksp.

3. It is used by Shakspere to exaggerate any thing detestable.

We shall lose our time,
And all be turn'd to barnacles or apes,
With foreheads villanous low. Shaksp.

VILLANOUSLY. adv. [from villanous.]
Wickedly; basely.

The wandering Numidian falsified his faith, and villanously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself. Kneller.

Baseness; wickedness.

VILLANY. n. f. [from villain; villanous, old French.]

1. Wickedness; baseness; depravity; gross atrociousness.

Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villany is not without such a rheum;
And he, long teared in it, makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shaksp.

He is the prince's jester; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villany. Shaksp.

2. A wicked action; a crime. In this sense it has a plural.

No villany, or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but a lie was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.

Such villanies rous'd Horace into wrath;
And 'tis more noble to pursue his path,
Than an old tale. Dryden.

VILLATICK. adj. [villaticus, Lat.] Belonging to villages.

Evening dragon came,
Assailant on the perched roofs,
And nests in order rang'd,
Of tame villatick fowl. Milow.

VILLI. n. f. [Lat.] In anatomy, are the same as fibres; and in botany, small hairs like the grain of plumb or flax, with which, as a kind of excrecence, some trees do abound. Quincy.

VILLOUS. adj. [villosus, Latin.] Shaggy; rough; furry.

The liquor of the stomach, which with fasting grows sharp, and the quick sensation of the inward villous coat of the stomach, seem to be the cause of the sense of hunger. Arbuthnot.

VIMINEOUS. adj. [vimineus, Lat.] Made of twigs.

As in the hive's vimineous dome
Ten thousand bees enjoy their home;
Each does her studious action vary,
To go and come, to fetch and carry. Pope.

VINCIBLE. adj. [from vincio, Lat.] Con-querable; superable.

He not vincible in spirit, and well assur'd that shortness of provision would in a short time draw the seditions to shorter limits, drew his sword. Hayward.

* Because 'twas absolutely in my power to have attended more heedfully, there was liberty in the principle, the mistake which influenced the error was vincible. Arb.

Where the respondent denies any proposition, the opponent must directly vindicate and confirm that proposition; i. e. he must make that proposition the conclusion of his next syllogism. Watts.

2. To revenge; to avenge.

We ought to have added, how far an holy war is to be pursued; whether to enforce a new belief, and to vindicate or punish infidelity. Barrow.

Man is not more inclinable to obey God than man; but God is more powerful to exact subordination, and to vindicate rebellion. Payson.

The more numerous the offenders are, the more his justice is concerned to vindicate the affront. Talbot.

Assemble ours, and all the Theban race,
To vindicate on Athens thy disgrace. Dryden.

VIN

The beauty of this town, without a fleet, From all the world shall dedicate her trade. Dryd.

4. To clear; to protect from censure. God's ways of dealing with us are by proposition of terrors and promises. To these is added the authority of the commander, vindicated from our neglect by the interposition of the greatest signs and wonders, in the hands of his prophets, and of his Son. Hammond.

I may assert eternal providence, And vindicate the ways of God to man. Milton.

VINDICATION. n. f. [vindication, Fr. from vindicare.] Defence; assertion; justification.

This is no vindication of her conduct. She still acts a mean part, and, through fear, becomes an accomplice in endeavouring to betray the Greeks. Brown.

VINDICATIVE. adj. [from vindicare.] Revengeful; given to revenge.

He, in heat of action, Is more vindicative than jealous love. Shakespeare.

Public revenges are for the most part fortunate; but in private revenges it is not so. Vindicative persons live the life of witches, who, as they are mischievous, so end they unfortunate. Bacon.

The fruits of adulter'd choler, and the evaporations of a vindicative spirit. Howell.

Do not too many believe no seal to be spiritual, but what is censorious or vindicative? whereas no seal is spiritual, that is not also charitable. Spratt.

Difficult, betwixt a passion purely vindicative, and those counsels where divine justice avenges the innocent. L'Estrange.

VINDICATOR. n. f. [from vindicare.] One who vindicates; an assertor.

He treats tyranny, and the vices attending it, with the utmost rigour; and consequently a noble soul is better pleased with a jealous vindicator of Roman liberty, than with a temporizing poet. Dryden.

VINDICATORY. adj. [from vindicator.]

1. Punitory; performing the office of vengeance.

The afflictions of Job were no vindicatory punishments to take vengeance of his sins, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall.

2. Defensory; justificatory.

VINDICTIVE. adj. [from vindicta, Lat.] Given to revenge; revengeful.

I am vindictive enough to repel force by force. Dryden.

Still virginal upon thy palm. Shakspeare.
- Virginal, n. f. [more usually virginals.]
A musical instrument so called, because commonly used by young ladies.
The musician hath produced two means of strining strings. The one is stopping them with the finger, as in the necks of lutes and viols; the other is the shortness of the string, as in harps and trian-gulars. Bacon.
- Virginitas, n. f. [virginitas, Latin] Maidenhead; unacquaintance with man.
You do impeach your modesty too much,
To trust the opportunity of night,
And the ill counsel of a desert place,
With the rich worth of your virginity. Shakspeare.

Acquainted with the world, and quite well bred, Drusa receives her visitants in bed. Low.

VISITATION. n. f. [visito, Lat.]

1. The act of visiting.

He comes not Like to his father's greatness, his approach, So out of circumstance and sudden, to his, 'Tis not a visitation fram'd, but fore'd

By need and accident. Shakespeare.

What would you with the princeps? —Nothing but peace and gentle visitation. Shakespeare.

2. Object of visits.

My early visitation, and my last. Milton.

3. [visitation, Fr.] Judicial visit or perambulation.

Your grace, in your metropolitan visitation, hath begun a good work, in taking this into your religious consideration; and you have endeavoured a reformation. Shakespeare.

The bishop ought to visit his diocese every year in person, unless he omits the same because he would not burthen his churches; and then ought to send his arch-deacon, which was the original of the arch-deacon's visitation. Augustine.

4. Judicial visitation by God; state of suffering judicially.

That which they do not understand when thou readest, thou shalt understand in the day of thy visitation. For many secrets of religion are not perceived till they be felt, and are not felt but in the day of a great calamity. Taylor.

5. Communication of divine love.
The most comfortable visitations God hath sent men from above, have taken especially the times of prayer as their most natural opportunities. Hooker.

VISITATORIAL, adj. [from visitator.] Belonging to a judicial visitor.

Some will have it, that an archdeacon does of common right execute this visitatorial power in his archdeaconry; but others say that an archdeacon has a visitatorial power only of common right per modum simplicis jurisdictionis, as being bishop's vicar. Ayliffe.

VISITER, n. f. [from visit.]

1. One who comes to see another.
Here's ado to lock up honesty and honour from the access of gentle visiters. Shakspeare.
You see this confluence, this great flood of visiters.

Consumptives of this degree entertain their visitors with strange rambling discourses of their in-stent of going here and there. Harvey.
I have a large house, yet I should hardly prevail to find one visiter, if I were not able to lure him with a bottle of wine. Swift.

2. [visiteur, Fr.] An occasional judge;
one who regulates the disorders of any society.

The visiters expelled the orthodox; they, without scruple or shame, possessed themselves of their colleges. Wotton.

To him you must your sickly state refer;
Your charter claims him as your visiter. Garth.
Whatever abuses have crept into the universities, might be reformed by strict injunctions to the visitors and heads of houses. Swift.

VISIVIZ, adj. [visif, Fr. visus, Latin.]
Formed in the act of seeing.

This happens when the axis of the visus concentrated from the object, fall not upon the same plane, but that which is conveyed into one eye is more depressed or elevated than that which enters the other. Brown.

VISOMY, n. f. [corrupted from physionomy.] Face; countenance. Not in use.
Twelve gods do sit around in royal state,
And Jove in midst with awful majesty.

To judge the strife between them hurried late:
Each of the gods by his like visum
Each to be known, but Jove above them all,
By his great looks and pow'r imperial. Spenser.

VISOR, n. f. [This word is variously written, visard, visar, visor, visard, visor. I prefer visor, as nearest the Latin visor, and concurring with visage, a kindred word: visiere, Fr.] A mask used to disguise and disguise. See VIZARD.

I fear, indeed, the weakness of my government before, made you think such a mask would be grateful unto me; and my weaker government now, makes you pull off the visor. Southey.

This kingly clown is such that you never saw to disfavoured a visor; his behaviour such, that he is beyond the degree of ridiculous. Sidney.

By which decent doth mask in visor fair,
And cast her colours dyed deep in gray,
To seem like truth, whose shape she well can seem. Spenser.

But that thy face is, visor-like, unchanging,
Made insipid with use of evil deeds,
I would essay, proud queen, to make thee bluth. Shakspeare.

One visor remains,
And that is Claudio; I know him by his bearing. Shakspeare.

The Cyclops, a people of Sicily, remarkable for cruelty, might, perhaps, in their wars use a headpiece, or visor. Browne.

Swarm of knaves the visor quite disgrace,
And hide secure behind a masked face. Young.

VISORED, adj. [from visor.] Masked.

Hence with thy brew'd enchantments, foul deceiver!

Hast thou betray'd my credulous innocence
With visior'd fullness and base forgery? Milton.

VISTA, n. f. [Italian.] View; prospect through an avenue.

In St. Peter's, when a man stands under the dome, if he looks upwards, he is astonished at the spacious hollow of the cupola, that makes one of the beautifullest vistas that the eye can pass through. Addison.

The finish'd garden to the view
Its vistas opens, and its alleys green. Thomson.

VISUAL, adj. [visuel, French.] Used in fight; exerting the power of sight; instrumental to sight.

An eye that lookt forth as it hangs a pretty distance by the visual nerve, hath been without any power of sight; and yet, after being replaced, recovered sight. Bacon.

Not think my hurt offends me; for my fire
Can visually repose in it the visual fire. Chapman.

No where so clear, sharpen'd his visual ray
To objects distant far. Milton.

Then purg'd with euphrasy and rue
The visual nerve, for he had much to see. Milton.

VITAL, adj. [vitalis, Latin.]

1. Contributing to life; necessary to life.
His heart, broken with unkindness and affliction, stretched to far beyond his limits with this excess of comfort, as it was able no longer to keep safe his vital parts. Sidney.

All nature laughs, the groves are fresh and fair;
The sun's mild lustre warms the vital air. Pope.

2. Relating to life.
Let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord, and vile reproach. Shakspeare.

On the rock a scanty measure place
Of vital flax, and turn the wheel apace. Dryden.

3. Containing life.
Spirits that live throughout,
Vital in every part, not as frail man,
In intrails, heart, or head, liver or reins,
Cannot but by annihilating die. Milton.

On the watery calm
His brooding wings the spirit of God outspreads;
And vital virtue infused, and vital warmth
Throughout the fluid mafs. Milton.

4. Being the seat of life.
The dust flew on, and pierc'd a vital part. Pope.

5. So disposed as to live. Little used, and rather Latin than English.

Pythagoras and Hippocrates not only affirm the birth of the seventh month to be vital, that of the eighth mortal, but the progression thereto to be measured by rule. Brown.

6. Essential; chiefly necessary.
Know, grief's vital part Consists in nature, not in art. Bishop Corbet.

VITALITY, n. f. [from vital.] Power of subsisting in life.

Whether that motion, vitality and operation were by incubation, or how else, the manner is only known to God. Raleigh.

For the fecundity of species produced only by food, providence hath endued all seed with a lasting vitality, that it by any accident it happen not to germinate the first year, it will continue its fecundity twenty or thirty years. Ray.

VITALLY, adv. [from vital.] In such a manner as to give life.

The organical structure of human bodies, whereby they are fitted to live and move, and be vitally informed by the soul, is the workmanship of a most wise, powerful, and beneficent maker. Bentley.

VITALS, n. f. [Without the singular.]
Parts essential to life.

By fits my swelling grief appears,
In rising sighs and falling tears,
That show too well the warm desires,
The silent, slow, consuming fires,
Which on my utmost vitals prey,
And melt my very soul away. Philips.

VITELLARY, n. f. [from vitellus, Latin.]
The place where the yolk of the egg swims in the white.

A greater difficulty in the doctrine of eggs is,
how the sperm of the cock attacheth into every egg;
since the vitellary or place of the yolk is very high. Brown.

TO VITIATE, v. a. [vitio, Latin.] To deprave; to spoil; to make less pure.

The sun in his garden gives him the purity of visible objects, and of true nature before he was vitiated by luxury. Locke.

The organs of speech are managed by so many muscles, that speech is not easily destroyed, though often from what related us to some particular letter. Holder.

Spirits encountering soul bodies, and exerting a fermentation of those vitiated humours, precipitate into putrid fevers. Harvey.

This undulating compliance will vitiate the taste of the readers, and misguide many of them in their judgments, where to approve and where to censure. Garth.

A transposition of the order of the sacramental words, in some men's opinion, vitiates baptism. Ayliffe.

VITIATION, n. f. [from vitiate.] De-pravation; corruption.

The forced extension of the body is imputed to the blood's vitation by malign putrid vapours smoking throughout the vessels. Harvey.

TO VITILOGATE, v. n. [vitiosus and litigo, Latin.] To contend in law litigiously and cavilously.

VITILIGATION, n. f. [from vitilogate.]
Contention; cavillation.

I'll force you, by right ratiocination,
To leave your vitiligation. Hudibras.

VITIOSITY, n. f. [from vitiosus, Latin.]
Depravity; corruption.

He charges it wholly upon the corruption, per-versity, and vitiosity of man's will, as the only cause that rendered all the arguments his doctrine came clothed with, ineffectual. South.

VITIOUS, adj. [vicieux, French; vitiosus,
Latin.]

1. Corrupt; wicked; opposite to virtuous.
It is rather applied to habitual faults, than criminal actions. It is used of persons and practices.

Make known
It is no vitious blot, murder, or foulness
That hath deprav'd me of your grace. Shakspeare.

Witness the irreverent son
Of him who built the ark, who for the shame
Done to his faith, and his heavy curse,
"Servant of servants," on his vitious race. Milton.

Wit's what the vitious teach, the virtuous learn;
By tools 'tis hated, and by knaves undone. Pope.
No troops abroad are to be disciplined as the English, which cannot well be otherwise, while the common soldiers have before their eyes the vitious example of their leaders. Swift.

2. Corrupt; having physical ill qualities.

When vitious language contends to be high, it is full of rock, mountain, and pointedness. B. Junf.
Here, from the vitious air and sickly fumes,
A plague did on the dumb creation rife. Dryden.

VITIOLUSLY, adv. [from vitious.] Not virtuously; corruptly.

VITIOLUSNESS, n. f. [from vitious.] Cor-ruptness; state of being vitious.

When we in our vitiosus grow lard,
The wise gods lead our eyes. Shakspeare.
What makes a governor justly detested is vitiosus nefs and ill morals. Virtue must tip the preacher's tongue and the ruler's scepter with authority. South.

VITREOUS, adj. [vitré, French; vitreus, Latin.] Glassy; consisting of glass; resembling glass.

The hole answers to the pupil of the eye; the crystalline humour to the lenticular glass; the dark room to the cavity containing the vitreous humour, and the white paper to the retina.

When the phlegm is too viscous, or separates into too great a quantity, it brings the blood into a morbid state; this viscous phlegm seems to be the vitreous petraite of the ancients.

VITREOUSNESS, n. f. [from vitreous.]

Resemblance of glass.

VITRIFICABLE, adj. [from vitricate.]

Convertible into glass.

To VITRIFICATE, v. a. [vitrum and facio, Latin.] To change into glass.

We have metals vitricate, and other materials, besides those of which you make glass.

VITRIFICATION, n. f. [vitrication, Fr. from vitricate.] Production of glass; act of changing, or state of being changed into glass.

For vitrication likewise, what metals will endure it? Also, because vitrication is accounted a kind of death of metals, what vitrication will admit of turning back again, and what not?

If the heat be more fierce, it maketh the grodder part itself run and melt; as in the making of ordinary glass; and in the vitrication of earth in the inner parts of furnaces; and in the vitrication of brick and metals.

Upon the knowledge of the different ways of making minerals and metals capable of vitrication, depends the art of making counterfeit or fictitious gems.

To VITRIFY, v. a. [vitricifer, Fr. vitrum and facio, Latin.] To change into glass.

Metals will vitrify; and perhaps some portion of the glass of metal vitricated, mixed in the pot of ordinary glass metal, will make the whole mass more tough.

Iron-slag, vitricified, has in it cortices incorporating one another, like those in agates.

To VITRIFY, v. n. To become glass; to be changed into glass.

Chymists make vessels of animal substances calcined, which will not vitricify in the fire: for all earth which hath any salt or oil in it, will turn to glass.

VITRIOL, n. f. [vitriol, French; vitriolum, Latin.]

Vitriol is produced by addition of a metallick matter with the fossil acid salt.

It rubbed in with a vitriol-stone.

VITRIOLATE, adj. [vitriolé, French; vitriolatus, Latin.]

Impregnated with vitriol; consisting of vitriol.

Iron may be dissolved by any tart, salt, or vitriolated water.

The water having dissolved the imperfectly calcined body, the vitriolated corpuscles swimming in the liquor, by their accretions constituted little masses of vitriol, which gave the water they impregnated a fair vitriolated colour.

VITRIOLICK, adj. [vitriolique, French; vitriolosus, Latin.]

Resembling vitriol; containing vitriol.

Copperose of Mars, by some called salt of steel, made by the spirits of vitriol or sulphur, well, after ablation, be attracted by the loadstone, and therefore whether those shooting salts partake but little of steel, and be not rather the vitriolous spirits fixed unto salt by the effluvia or odour of steel, is not without good question.

These salts have somewhat of a nitrous taste, but mixed with a smatch of a vitriolick.

By over-fermentation or long-keeping, wine becomes sharp, as in hock, like the vitriolick acidity.

VITULINE, adj. [vitulinus, Lat.] Belonging to a calf, or to veal.

VITUPERABLE, adj. [vituperabilis, Lat.] Blameworthy.

To VITUPERATE, v. a. [vituperer, Fr. vitupero, Lat.] To blame; to censure.

VITUPERATION, n. f. [vituperatio, Lat.] Blame; censure.

Such a writing ought to be clean, and free from any cavil or vituperation of satire.

VIVACIOUS, adj. [vivar, Latin.]

1. Long-lived.

Though we should allow them their perpetual calm and equability of heat, they will never be able to prove, that the reform men would be so vivacious as they would have us believe.

2. Sprightly; gay; active; lively.

VIVACIOUSNESS, n. f. [vivacité, Fr.]

VIVACITY, n. f. [from vivacious.]

1. Liveliness; sprightliness.

He had a great vivacity in his countenance.

2. Longevity; length of life.

Fables are raised concerning the vivacity of deer: for neither are their gestation nor increment such as may afford an argument of long life.

3. Power of living.

They are esteemed very hot in operation, and will, in a convenient air, survive some days the loss of their heads and hearts; so vigorous is their vivacity.

VIVARY, n. f. [vivarium, Latin.] A watten.

VIVE, adj. [vif, Fr. vivus, Lat.] Lively; forcible; pressing.

By a vive and forcible persuasion, he moved him to a war upon Flanders.

VIVENCY, n. f. [vivo, Lat.] Manner of supporting or continuing life, or vegetation.

Although not in a distinct and indisputable way of vivency, or answering in all points the property of plants, yet in inferior and depending constitutions they are determined by feminilities.

VIVES, n. f. A distemper among horses.

Vives is much like the strangles, and the chief difference is, that for the most part the strangles happen to colts and young horses while they are at grass, by feeding with their heads down wards, by which means the swelling inclines more to the jaws; but the vives happens to horses at any age and time, and is more particularly seated in the glands and kernels under the ears.

VIVID, adj. [viduus, Latin.]

1. Lively; quick; striking.

The liquor, retaining its former vivid colour, was grown clear again.

To make these experiments the more manifest, such bodies ought to be chosen as have the fullest and most vivid colours, and two of those bodies compared together.

2. Sprightly; active.

Body is a fit workhouse for sprightly vivid faculties to exercise and exert themselves in.

Where the genius is bright, and the imagination vivid, the power of memory may lose its improvement.

VIVIDLY, adv. [from vivid.] With life; with quickness; with strength.

In the moon we can, with excellent telescopes, discern many hills and valleys, whereof some are more and some less vividly illustrated; and others have a fainter, others a deeper shade.

Sensitive objects affect a man, in the state of this present life, much more warmly and vividly than those which affect only his nobler part, his mind.

VIVIDNESS, n. f. [from vivid.] Life; vigour; quickness.

VIVIFICAL, adj. [vivificus, Lat.] Giving life.

To VIVIFICATE, v. a. [vivifico, Lat.]

1. To make alive; to inform with life; to animate.

2. To recover from such a change of form as seems to destroy the essential properties. A chymical term.

VIVIFICATION, n. f. [vivification, Fr. from vivificare.] The act of giving life.

If that motion be in a certain order, there follows vivification and figuration.

VIVIFICK, adj. [vivifique, Fr. vivificus, Latin.] Giving life; making alive.

Without the sun's salutary and vivific beams, all motion would cease, and nothing be left but darkness and death.

To VIVIFY, v. a. [vivifier, Fr. virus and facio, Lat.] To make alive; to animate; to endue with life.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that there is a worm that breedeth in old snow, of a reddish colour, and dull of motion; which would show that snow hath in it a secret warmth, else it could hardly vivify.

Sitting on eggs doth vivify, not nourish.

Out worms, as soon as vivified, creep into the stomach for nutriment.

VIVIPAROUS, adj. [vivus and parus, Latin.] Bringing the young alive opposed to oviparous.

When we perceive that bats have tents, it is not unreasonable to infer, they give suck; but where no other flying animals have these parts, we cannot from them infer a viviparous exhalation.

Their species might continue, though they had been viviparous; yet it would have brought their individuals to very small numbers.

It birds had been viviparous, the burthen of their womb had been too great and heavy, that their wings would have failed them.

VIXEN, n. f.

Vixen, or fox, is the name of the fox, otherwise applied to a woman whose nature and conversation is thereby compared to a she-fox.

O! when she's angry, she is keen and shrewish. She was a vixen, when she went to school.

And though she be but little, she is fierce.

See a pack of spaniels, called foxes, making a hunt of a two-legged vixen, who only fleeth the whole loud pack, to be singled out by one.

VIZ, adv. [This word is videlicet, written with a contraction.] To wit; that is. A barbarous form of an unnecessary word.

That which to oft, by sundry writers, has been applied to almost all fighters.

More justly may be ascribed to this, Than any other warrior, viz.

None ever acted both parts bolder, Both of a chieftain and a soldier.

The chief of all signs which the Almighty endued man with, is human voice, and the several variations thereof by the organs of speech, and letters of the alphabet, formed by the several motions of the mouth.

Let this be done relatively, viz. one thing is more or stronger, calling the rest behind, and rendering it less sensible by its opposition.

VIZARD, n. f. [vizere, French. See VIZOR.] A mask used for disguise.

Let the faults of the makers be graciously and truly as become the person when the vizards are off.

Brought vizards in a civiler disguise. Reformation.

A lie is like a vizard, that may cover the face indeed, but can never become it.

Ye shall know them by their fruits, not by their well or ill living; for they put on the vizard of seeming sanctity.

He mistook it for a very whimsical sort of mask, but upon a nearer view he found, that the held her vizard in her hand.

To VIZARD, v. [from the noun.] To mask.

Degree being awarded,
Th' unworthiest shows as fairly in the mask.

UMPIRE. n. f. [This word Minghew, with great applause from Shanner, derives from un pere, French, a father.] An arbitrator, one who, as a common friend, decides disputes. It is by Frown taken simply for a judge, in a sense not usual.

Give me some pretty counsel, or behold,
Twist my extreme and me, this bloody trade
Shall play the umpire, arbitrating that,
Which he commeth on thy years and art
Could to no use or true honour bring.

Just death, and umpire of men's miseries,
With sweet enticement doth diffuse me hence.

But as Wayne unkent led on the plumes,
And made the umpire of my friends Brown.

The learned Shanner, in that book, takes not upon him to play the advocate for the umpires, but the umpire between them and the peripatetics.

The vast distance that fin had put between the offending creature and the offended Creator, required the help of some great umpire and intercessor, to open him a new way of access to God; and this Christ did for us as mediator. South.

The jealous feels, that dare not trust their cause so far from their own will as from the laws, You for their umple and their synod take. Dryden.

Among those perils, going to law was utterly a fault, being ordinarily on such accounts as were too light for the hearing of courts and umpires. Kettwell.

UN. A Saxon privative or negative particle answering to in of the Latins, and a of the Greeks, on Dutch. It is placed almost at will before adjectives and adverbs. All the instances of this kind of composition cannot therefore be inserted; but I have collected a number sufficient, perhaps more than sufficient, to explain it.

The examples however, though numerous, might have easily been made more; for almost every adjective has a substantive and an adverb adhering to it, as unfaithful, unfaithfulness, unfaithfully. Un is prefixed to adjectives with their derivatives, as unapt, unaptly, unaptness; and to passive participles, as unhurt, unhurt, unhurt, unhurt: it is prefixed likewise to principal adjectives, as unpleasing, unpleasing, but rarely in the verbal form expressing action, we cannot say, the dart flew unwounding, though we say, the man escaped unwounded. In and may be thus distinguished: To words merely English we prefix un, as unjust; to words borrowed in the positive form, but made negative by ourselves, we prefix un, as ungenerous, ungenerous. When we borrow both words, we retain the Latin or French in, as inelegant, inelegant; impolitic, impolitic. Before substantives, if they have the English termination ness, it is proper to prefix un, as unhappiness; ungraciousness: If they have the Latin or French terminations in ty, ice, or ence, and for the most part if they end in ty, the negative in is put before them, as unhappy, unhappiness, unjust, injustice; imprudence; unfaithful, unfaithfulness, infidelity.

UNABASHED. adj. [from abashed.] Not shamed; not confounded by modesty. Earle's on high. Rood unabashed below. And Tutchin flagrant from the fount below. Pope.

UNABLE. adj. [from able.] 1. Not having ability. With to before a verb, and for before a noun.

Zeal mov'd thee: To please thy gods thou dost it; gods unable To acquit themselves, and protect their foes. Milton.

The prince, unable to conceal his pain, Gaze'd on the fair, And sigh'd and look'd, and sigh'd again. Dryden. I intended to put it in practice, though un-able for the attempt of such a poem. Dryden.

Man, under the disadvantages of a weak and fallen nature, was unable even to form an idea of happiness worthy his reasonable ambition. Rogers.

2. Weak; impotent. A love that makes breath poor, and speech un-able; Beyond all manner of so much I love you. Shakspeare.

UNABOLISHED. adj. [from abolished.] Not repealed; remaining in force. The number of needless laws unabolished, doth weaken the force of them that are necessary. Hooker.

UNACCEPTABLE. adj. [from acceptable.] Not pleasing; not such as is well received. The marquis at that time was very unacceptable to his countrymen. Clarendon.

'Tis as indecent as unacceptable; and all men are willing to flink out of company, the sober for the hazards, and the jovial for the unpleasant. Government of the Tongue.

Every method for deterring others from the like practices for the future, must be unacceptable and displeasing to the friends of the guilty. Addison.

If he shrinks from an unacceptable duty, there is a secret reserve of infidelity at the bottom. Rogers. UNACCEPTABLENESS. n. f. [from unacceptable.] State of not pleasing.

This alteration arises from the unacceptableness of the subject I am upon. Collier.

UNACCEPTED. adj. [from accepted.] Not accepted.

By turns put on the suppliant, and the lord; Offer'd again the unaccepted wreath, And choice of happy love, or misty death. Prior.

UNACCESSIBLENESS. n. f. [from accessible.] State of not being to be attained or approached.

Many excellent things are in nature, which, by reason of the remoteness from us, and unaccessibility to them, are not within any of our faculties to apprehend. Hale.

UNACCOMMODATED. adj. [from accommodated.] Unfurnished with external convenience.

Unaccommodated man is no more than such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art. Shakspeare.

UNACCOMPANIED. adj. [from accompanied.] Not attended.

Seldom one accident, prosperous or adverse, cometh unaccompanied with the like. Heyward.

UNACCOMPLISHED. adj. [from accomplished.] Unfinished; incomplete.

Beware of death: thou canst not die unpunish'd, And leave an unaccomplish'd love behind. Dryden.

Thy vows are mine. The gods, destin'd at his approach, withdrew, Not durst their unaccomplish'd crime pursue. Dryden.

UNACCOUNTABLE. adj. [from accountable.] 1. Not explicable; not to be solved by reason; not reducible to rule.

There has been an unaccountable disposition of late, to fetch the fashion from the French. Addison.

What is yet more unaccountable, would he complain of their resisting his omnipotence. Rogers.

The Chinese are an unaccountable people, strangely compounded of knowledge and ignorance. Baker.

The manner whereby the soul and body are united, and how they are distinguished, is wholly unaccountable to us. Swift.

2. Not subject; not controlled.

UNACCOUNTABLY. adv. Strangely.

The boy proved to be the son of the merchant, whose heart had so unaccountably melted at the sight of him. Addison.

UNACCURATE. adj. [from accurate.] Not exact.

Galileo using an unaccurate way, defined the air to be in weight to water but as one to four hundred. Boyle.

UNACCURATENESS. n. f. [from unaccurate.] Want of exactness. For this are commonly used inaccurate and inaccuracy.

It may be much more probably maintained than hitherto, as against the unaccurateness and inconcludings of the analytical experiments vulgarly to be relied on. Boyle.

UNACCUSTOMED. adj. [from accustomed.] 1. Not used; not habituated: with to.

I was chastised as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke. Jeremiah.

The necessity of air to the most of animals unaccustomed to the want of it, may best be judged of by the following experiments. Boyle.

2. New; not usual.

I'll send one to Mantua, Where that same banish'd runaway doth live, Shall sign his such an unaccustom'd drum. That he may keep Tibalt company. Shakspeare.

The Britons recoiled, and gladly change Sweet native home, for unaccustom'd air. Philips.

An old word ought never to be fixed to an unaccustom'd idea, without just and evident necessity. Watts.

UNACKNOWLEDGED. adj. [from acknowledged.] Not owned.

The fear of what was to come from an unknown, at least an unacknowledged successor to the crown, clouded much of that prosperity. Clarendon.

UNACQUAINTANCE. n. f. [from acquaintance.] Want of familiarity; want of knowledge: followed by with.

The first is an utter unacquaintance with his master's designs, in these words: The servant knoweth not what his master doth. South.

Madam, I have unadvis'd Deliver'd you a paper that I should not. Shakespeare.

2. Done without due thought; rash.

This contract to-night
Is too rash, too unadvis'd, too sudden,
Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be,
Ere one can say, It lightens. Shakespeare.

These prosperous proceedings were turned back by the unadvised forwardness of divers chief counsellors, in making sudden and unseasonable alterations. Harward.

Specifick conformities can be no unadvised productions; but are regulated by the immediate efficiency of some knowing agent. Glauville.

UNADVISEDLY. adv. Imprudently; rashly; indifferently.

A strange kind of speech to christen ears; and such as, I hope, they themselves do acknowledge unadvisedly uttered. Hooker.

What man's wit is there able to fathom the depth of those dangerous and fearful evils, whereinto our weak and impotent nature is inclinable to sink itself, rather than to shew an acknowledgment of error in that which once we have unadvisedly taken upon us to defend, against the stream of a contrary publick resolution? Hooker.

What is done cannot be now amended;
Men shall deal unadvisedly sometimes,
Which after-hours give leisure to repent of. Shakespeare.

A word unadvisedly spoken on the one side, or misunderstood on the other, has raised such an aversion to him, as in time has produced a perfect hatred of him. South.

UNADULTERATED. adj. Genuine; not

A post there is, moored on either side,
Where ships may rest, unanchored, and untied. Pope.

UNANSWERED. adj. [un and knell.] Without the bell rung. This knell I doubt,

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Cut off, even in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhousel'd, unhonour'd, unan'd. Shakespeare.

UNANIMATED. adj. Not enlivened; not vivified.

Look on these half-lives as the imperfect products of a half-way state: like the troops in the Nile, part knotted and life, and part a lump of unmo-tioned unanimated matter. Dryden.

UNANIMITY. n. f. [unanimité, French.]

Agreement in design or opinion.

An to all party of men acting with unanimity,

Unhousel'd, unhonour'd, unan'd. Shakespeare.

UNANSWERABLE. adj. Not to be refuted.

This is a manifest and unanswerable argument.
Nor is it. Barthol.

I shall not conclude it false, though I think the emergent difficulties, which are its attendants, unanswerable. Glauville.

The pye's question was wisely let fall without a reply, to intinate that it was unanswerable. L'Estrange.

These speculations are strong intimations, not only of the excellency of a human soul, but of its independence on the body; and if they do not prove, do at least confirm, these two great points, which are established by many other reasons that are unanswerable.

U N A

As to the excuse drawn from the demands of credit, it is for real, it is unanswerable. Attributing
UNANSWERABLE, adv. Beyond confutation.

It will put their little logic hard to it, to prove, that there can be any obedience where there is no command. And therefore it unanswerably follows, that the abettors of the tormented principle plead conference in a direct and bare-faced contradiction to God's express command. South.

UNANSWERED, adj.

1. Not opposed by a reply.

Must I vainly hear

This arrogance unanswer'd? Thou 'rt a traitor. Addison.

Not a feather is unartificially made, mislaid, redundant, or defective. Deane.

UNASKED, adj.

1. Not courted by solicitation.

With what earnestness, what circumstance

Unask'd, thou tak'st such pains to tell me only

My ion's the better man. Deane.

2. Not sought by entreaty or care.

The bearded corn entic'd

From earth unask'd, nor was that earth renew'd. Dryden.

How, or why

Should all conspire to cheat us with a lye?

Unask'd their pains, ungrateful then advice,

Starving their gain, and murthering their peace. Dryden.

UNASPIRING, adj. Not ambitious.

To be modest and unaspiring, in honour preferring one another. Rogers.

UNASSAULTABLE, adj. Exempt from assault.

In the number, I do but know one,

That unassailable holds on his rank,

Unshak'd of motion, Shakespeare.

UNASSAILED, adj. Not attacked; not assaulted.

As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,

It grieves my soul to have thee unassail'd. Shakespeare.

I believe

That he, the supreme good, to whom all things

Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,

Would send a glistering guard, if need were,

To keep my life and honour unassail'd. Deane.

UNASSAYED, adj. Unattempted.

What is faith, love, virtue unassay'd? Milton.

Alone, without exterior help furnish'd?

UNASSISTED, adj. Not helped.

His victories were the stories of reason, unassisted

by the force of human power, and as gentle as the triumphs of light over darkness. Addison.

What unassisted could not discover, that God bests all things before us in the revelation of the gospel: a happy equal to the most enlarged desires; a state of immortal and unchangeable glory. Rogers.

UNASSISTED. adj. Giving no help.

With these I went, a brother of the war;
Nor idle stood, with unassisting hands,
When savage beasts, and men's more savage bands,
Their virtuous toil subdu'd; yet these I sway'd. Dryden.

UNASSU'MING. adj. Not arrogant.

Unassuming worth in secret liv'd

And died neglected. Thomson.

UNASSU'RED. adj.

1. Not confident.

The ensuing treatise, with a timorous and unassured countenance, adventures into your preface. Gilchrist.

2. Not to be trusted.

The doubts and dangers, the delays and woes,
The feigned friends, the unassured loves,
Do make a lover's life a wretch's hell. Spenser.

UNATONED. adj. Not expiated.

Could you afford him such a bribe as that,
A brother's blood yet unatoned? Rome.

UNATTAINABLE. adj. Not to be gained or obtained; being out of reach.

Praise and prayer are God's due worship; which are unattainable by our discourse, simply considered, without the benefit of divine revelation. Dryd.

I do not expect that men should be perfectly kept from error; that is more than human nature can, by any means, be advanced to: I aim at no such unattainable privilege; I only speak of what they should do. Locke.

UNATTAINABLENESS. n. f. State of being out of reach.

Desire is stopped by the opinion of the impossibility, or unattainableness of the good proposed. Locke.

UNATTEMPTED. adj. Untried; not assayed.

He left no means unattempted of destroying his son. Sidney.

Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his fair angels would salute my palm;
But that my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, raileth on the rich. Shaksp.

Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme. Milton.

Leave nothing unattempted to destroy that perjur'd race. Denham.

Shall we be discouraged from any attempt of doing good, by the possibility of our failing in it? How many of the best things would, at this rate, have been left unattempted? Atterbury.

UNATTENDED. adj.

1. Having no retinue, or attendants.

With goddess-like demeanor forth she went,
Not unattended. Milton.

2. Having no followers.

Such unattended generals can never make a revolution in Parnassus. Dryden.

3. Unaccompanied; forsaken.

Your constancy
Hath left you unattended. Shaksp.

UNATTENDING. adj. Not attending.

Ill is lost that praise,
That is address'd to unattending ears. Milton.

Ev'ry nymph of the wood, her tresses rendering,
Throws off her armlet of pearl in the main;
Neptune in anguish his charge unattending,
Vessels are found'ring, and vows are in vain. Dryden.

UNATTENTIVE. adj. Not regarding.

Man's nature is so unattentive to good, that there can scarce be too many monitors.

Government of the Tongue.
Such things are not accompanied with show, and therefore seldom draw the eyes of the unattentive. Tatler.

UNAVAILABLE. adj. Useless; vain with respect to any purpose.

When we have unavailably tried to find out the strongest cause, we should imagine that reading is so unavailing, that still we can learn is, that sermons are the ordinance of God, the scriptures dark, and the labour of reading only. Hewer.

UNAVAILING. adj. Useless; vain.

Since my inevitable death you know,
You safely unavailing pity show:
'Tis popular to mourn a dying foe. Dryden.
Supine he tumbles on the triniton sands,
Before his helpless friends and native bands,
And spreads for aid his unavailing hands. Pope.

UNAVOIDABLE. adj.

1. Inevitable; not to be shunned.

Oppression on one side, and ambition on the other, are the unavoidable occasions of war. Dryd.
It is unavoidable to all, to have opinions, without certain proofs of their truth. Locke.

Single acts of transgression will, through weakness and surprise, be unavoidable to the best guarded. Rogers.

The merits of Christ will make up the unavoidable deficiencies of our service; will prevail for pardon to our sincere repentance. Rogers.

All sentiments of worldly grandeur vanish at that unavoidable moment which decides the destiny of men. Clarissa.

2. Not to be missed in ratiocination.

That something is of itself, is self-evident, because we see things are; and the things that we see must either have had some first cause of their being, or have been always, and of themselves; one of them is unavoidable. Tillotson.

I think it unavoidable for every rational creature, that will examine his own or any other existence, to have the notion of an eternal, wise being, who had no beginning. Locke.

UNAVOIDABLENESS. n. f. Inevitability.

How can we conceive it subject to material impressions? and yet the impotency of pain, and unavoidableness of sensations, strongly persuade that we are so. Gilchrist.

UNAVOIDABLY. adv. Inevitably.

The most perfect administration must unavoidably produce opposition from multitudes who are made happy by it. Addison.

UNAVOIDED. adj. Inevitable.

We see the very wreck that we must suffer;
And unavoids is the danger now. Shaksp.

Rare poems ask rare friends;
Yet satyrs, since the most of mankind be Their unavoids subject, fewest see. Ben Jonson.

UNAUTHORIZED. adj. Not supported by authority; not properly commissioned.

To kiss in private? Shaksp.

An unauthorised kiss. Shaksp.

It is for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthorised by my supreme command. Dryden.

UNAWARE. } adv. [from aware, or

UNAWARES. } wary.]

1. Without thought; without previous meditation.

Take heed lest you fall unawares into that inconvenience you formerly found fault with. Spenser.

It is my father's face,
Whom, in this conflict, I unawares have kill'd. Shaksp.

Firm we subsist; yet possible to swerve,
And fall into deception unware. Milton.

A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and honey mix'd; with added store
Of opium; to his keeper he brought,
Whom swallow'd unawares the sleepy draught,
And snor'd secure. Dryden.

'Tis a sensation like that of a limb lopped off; one is trying every minute unawares to use it, and finds it is not. Pope.

2. Unexpectedly; when it is not thought of; suddenly.

Left destruction come upon him at unawares, and let his net that he hath hid, catch himself. Psalms.

My hand, unawares to me, was, by the force of that endeavour it just before employed to sustain the fallen weight, carried up with such violence, that I bruised it. Boyle.

Though we live never so long, we are still surprised: we put the evil day far from us, and then it catches us unawares, and we tremble at the prospect. Waller.

3. In this sense I believe at unawares is the proper use.

He breaks at unawares upon our walks,
And, like a midnight wolf, invades the fold. Dryden.

UNA'WED. adj. Unrestrained by fear or reverence.

The raging and sanathick distemper of the house of commons must be attributed to the want of such good ministers of the crown, as being unaw'd by any guilt of their own, could have watched other men's. Clarendon.

Unfore'd by punishment, unaw'd by fear,
His words were simple and his soul sincere. Dryden.

UNBACKED. adj.

1. Not tamed; not taught to bear the rider.

Then I bent my labor;
At which like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears,
Advanc'd their eyelids, lifted up their noses,
As they smelt mischief. Shaksp.

A well-wayed horse will safely convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unback'd filly may give thee a fall. Shaksp.

They flinch like unback'd fillies. Danby.

2. Not countenanced; not aided.

Let the weight of thine own infamy
Fall on thee unsupported, and unback'd. Daniel.

UNBALANCED. adj. Not poised; not in equipoise.

Let earth unbalance'd from her orbit fly,
Planets and suns run lawless through the sky. Pope.

UNBALAST. } adj. Not kept steady by UNBALASTED. } ballast; unsteady.

They having but newly left those grammatical flats, where they struck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction; and now on the sudden transported under another climate, to be tost and tumulded with their unbalanced wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy, do, for the most part, grow into hatred of learning. Milton.

As at sea th' unballast vessel rides,
Cast to and fro, the sport of winds and tides;
So, in the bounding chariot tost'd on high,
The youth is hurried headlong through the sky. Addison.

UNBAND. } [from band.] Wanting

a string, or band.

Your hole should be ungartered, your honours unbanded, and every thing demonstrating a careless desolation. Shaksp.

To UNBAR. v. a. [from bar.] To open,

by removing the bars; to unbolt.

'Tis not secure, this place or that to guard,
If any other entrance stand unbar'd. Denham.

These rites the king refus'd,
Deaf to their cries; nor would the gates unbar
Of sacred peace, or loose th' unbar'd war. Dryden.

UNBARBED. adj. [barba, Latin.] Not shaven. Out of use.

Must I go shew them my unbarbed scence?
Must my base tongue give to my noble heart
A lie? Shaksp.

UNBARKED. adj. [from bark.] Decorticated; stripped of the bark.

A branch of a tree, unbarbed some space at the bottom, and so set in the ground, hath grown. Bacon.

UNBARSHFUL. adj. Impudent; shameless.

Nor did I with unbarshful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility. Shaksp.

UNBATE. adj. [from bate.] Not repressed; not blunted.

Where is the horse, that doth untread again
His tedious measures with th' unbat'd fire
That he did pace them first? Shaksp.

UNBATHE. adj. [from bath.] Not wet.

Fierce Palmyra, their passage to prevent,
Thrust full on Cymon's back in his descent:
The blade return'd unbat'h'd, and to the handle bent. Dryden.

UNBATTERED. adj. Not injured by blows.

I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear their slaves: or thou, Macbeth;
Or else my sword, with an unbatte'd edge,
I sheath again undeeded. Shakspere.

TO UNBAY. v. a. To set open; to free from the restraint of mounds.

I ought now to loose the reins of my affections, to unbay the current of my passion, and loose on without boundary or measure. Norris.

UNBEARING. adj. Bringing no fruit.

He with his pruning hook disjoins
Unbearing branches from their bair,
And grafts more happy in their stead. Dryden.

UNBEATEN. adj.

1. Not treated with blows.

His mare was truer than his chronicle;
For she had rode five miles unpur'd, unbeaten,
And then at last turn'd tail towards Neweaston. Bp. Corbet.

2. Not trodden.

We must tread unbeaten paths, and make a way where we do not find one; but it shall be always with a light in our hand. Bacon.

If your bold muse dare tread unbeaten paths.
Rafcommon.

Virtue, to crown her fav'rites, loves to try
Some new, unbeaten passage to the sky. Swift.

UNBECOMING. adj. Indecent; unsuitable; indecorous.

Here's our chief guest.—
—If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all things unbecoming. Shakspere.

No thought of sight,
None of retreat, no unbecoming deed
That argu'd fear. Milton.

I should rather believe that the nose was the seat of wrath in beasts than in mankind; and that it was unbecoming of any but Pan, who had very much of the beast in him, to wrinkle up his nose in anger. Dryden.

My grief lets unbecoming speeches fall:
I should have dy'd and not complain'd at all. Dryd.

This petulance in conversation prevails among fools of that sex, where it appears the most unbecoming and unnatural. Addison.

Men of wit, learning, and virtue, might strike out every offensive or unbecoming passage from plays. Swift.

Such proceed upon debates without unbecoming warmth. Swift.

UNBECOMINGNESS. n. s. Indecency; indecorum.

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the fault. Locke.

TO UNBEG. v. a. To raise from a bed.

Eols unbeg themselves, and stir at the noise of thunder. Walton.

UNBETTING. adj. Not becoming; not suitable.

Love is full of unbetting strains,
All wanton as a child, skipping in vain. Shaksp.

Far be it that I should write thee sin, or blame!
Or think thee unbetting holiest place. Milton.

He might several times have made peace with his disappointed subjects, upon terms not at all unbet-ting his dignity or interest; but he rather chose to sacrifice the whole alliance to his private passion. Swift.

TO UNBEGOT. v. a. To deprive of existence.

With each minute he could unbegot
Those rebel souls who dare usurp his seat. Dryden.

UNBEGOT. adj. [from begot.]

1. Eternal; without generation.

Why should he attribute the same honour to matter, which is subject to corruption, as to the eternal, unbegotten, and immutable God?

2. Not yet generated.

God omnipotent, making

Armies of possibleness; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot. Shaksp.

It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unbegot, to being yet unbegot. Milton.

3. Not attaining existence.

Where a child finds his own parents his perversers, better were it for him to have been unborn and unbegot, than ask a blessing of those whose conversation breathes nothing but a curse. South.

TO UNBEGUILE. v. a. To undeceive; to set free from the influence of any deceit.

Then unbeguile thyself, and know with me,
That angels, though on earth employ'd they be,
Are still in heaven. Donne.

Their consciences unbeguiled the vulgar of the odd opinion the loyalists had formerly infused into them, by their concionatory invectives. Howell.

UNBEHELD. adj. Unseen; not discoverable to the sight.

These then, though unbeheld in deep of night,
Shine not in vain. Milton.

UNBELIEF. n. s.

1. Incredulity.

'Tis not vain or fabulous,
What the sage poets, taught by th' heav'nly muse,
Storied of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimeras, and enchanted isles,
And risted rocks, whose entrance leads to hell;
For such there be: but unbelief is blind. Milton.

I'm justly plagued by this your unbelief,
And am myself the cause of my own grief. Dryd.

Such an universal acquaintance with things will keep you from an excess of credulity and unbelief;
i. e. a readiness to believe or to deny every thing at first hearing. Watts.

2. Infidelity; irreligion.

Where profess'd unbelief is, there can be no visible church of Christ; there may be where sound belief wanteth. Hooker.

TO UNBELIEVE. v. a.

1. To discredit; not to trust.

Heav'n shield your grace from woe,
As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go! Shaksp.

So great a prince and favourite so suddenly in-tamorphosed into travellers with no greater train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses. Wotton.

2. Not to think real or true.

Nor less than sight and hearing could convince
Of such an unforcen and unbelieve'd offence. Dryden.

UNBELIEVER. n. s. An infidel; one who believes not the scripture of God.

The antient fathers being often constrained to show what warrant they had so much to rely upon the scriptures, endeavour'd still to maintain the authority of the books of God, by arguments such as unbelievers themselves must needs think reasonable, if they judg'd thereof as they should. Hooker.

What endless war would jealous nations tear,
If none above did witness what they swear?
Sad fate of unbelievers, and yet just,
Among themselves to find so little trust. Waller.

In the New Testament, religion is usually expressed by faith in God and Christ, and the love of them. Hence it is that true christians are so frequently called believers; and wicked and ungodly men unbelievers. Tillotson.

He pronounces the children of such parents as were, one of them a christian, and the other an unbeliever, holy, on account of the faith and holiness of that one. Afterbury.

Men always grow vicious before they become unbelievers; but if you would once convince profligates by topics drawn from the view of their own quiet, reputation, and health, their infidelity would soon drop off. Swift.

UNBELIEVING. adj. Infidel.

No stay of slaughter found his vigorous arm;
But th' unbelieving squadrons turn'd to flight.
Smote in the rear. Philips.

This wrought the greatest confusion in the unbelieving Jews, and the greatest conviction in the gentiles. Addison.

In the design of the apostles, when all who professed themselves disciples of Christ were converts of conscience, this layser confusion might be restrained to the unbelieving part of mankind. Rogers.

UNBELOVED. adj. Not loved.

Whose'er you are, not unbelov'd by heav'n,
Since on our friendly shore your ships are driven. Dryden.

TO UNBEND. v. a.

1. To free from flexure.

It is lawful to relax and unbend our bow, but not to suffer it to be unready, or unstrung. Taylor.

I must be in the battle; but I'll go
With empty quiver, and unbended bow. Dryden.

2. To relax; to remit; to set at ease for a time.

Here have I seen the king, when great affairs,
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
Attended to the chase by all the flow'r of youth. Denham.

From those great cares when ease your soul
unbends,
Your pleasures are design'd to noble ends. Dryd.

3. To relax vitiously or effeminately.

You unbend your noble strength, to think
So brain-sickly of things. Shakspere.

UNBENDING. adj.

1. Not suffering flexure.

Not so, when swift Camilla scours the plain, Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main. Pope.

2. Not yielding; resolute.

Ye noble few, who here unbending stand Beneath life's pressures, yet a little while,
And all your woes are past. Thomson.

3. Devoted to relaxation.

Since what was omitted in the acting is now kept in, I hope it may entertain your lordship at an unbending hour. Ross.

UNBENEFICED. adj. Not preferred to a benefice.

More vacant pulpits would more converts make,
All would have latitude enough to take:
The rest unbenefic'd your sects maintain. Dryden.

UNBENEFICENT. adj. Not kind.

A religion which not only forbids, but by its natural influence sweetens all bitterness and asperity of temper, and corrects that selfish narrowness of spirit which inclines men to a fierce unbeneficent behaviour. Rogers.

UNBENIGHTED. adj. Never visited by darkness.

Beyond the polar circles; to them day
Had unbenighted shone, while the low sun,
To recompense his distance, in their sight
Had rounded still the horizon. Milton.

UNBENTON. adj. Malignant; malevo-
lent.

To th' other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In fertile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy; and when to join
In synod unbent. Milton.

UNBENT. adj.

1. Not strained by the string.

Apollo heard, and, conquering his disdain,
Unbent his bow, and Greece inspir'd again. Dryden.

2. Having the bow unstrung.

Why hast thou gone so far,
To be unbent when thou hast ta'en thy stand,
Th' elected deer before thee? Shakspere.

3. Not crushed; not subdued.

But thou, secure of soul, unbent with woe,
The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppose. Dryden.

4. Relaxed; not intent.

Be not always on affairs intent,
But let thy thoughts be easy and unbent:
When our mind's eyes are disengag'd and free,
They clearer, farther, and distinctly see. Denham.

UNBESIMING. adj. Unbecoming.

No civility of manners transported me by the indignity of his manner, or by any thing arresting myself. King Charles.

For he has unbought the crown from them;
Unbought crown, unbought bliss. Thomson.
UNBOUGHT. adj. Not intreated.
Left heart should inquire us, his timely care
Hath, unbought, provided; and his hands
Cloath'd us in poverty; paying while he judg'd.

UNBESTOWED. adj. Not given; not disposed of.

He had now but one son and one daughter unbested.
Bacon.

UNBETRAYED. adj. Not betrayed.

Many being privy to the fact,
How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd! Daniel.

UNBEWAILED. adj. Not lamented.

Let determin'd things to destiny
Hold unbewail'd their way. Shakespeare.

TO UNBWAILED. v. a. [from witch.] To free from fascination.

TO UNBIASS. v. a. To free from any external motive; to disentangle from prejudice.

That our understandings may be free to examine, and reason unbias'd give its judgment, being that whereon a right direction of our conduct to true happiness depends; it is in this we should employ our chief care. Locke.

The standing evidences of the gospel, every time they are considered, gain upon sincere, unbias'd minds. Atterbury.

The trust service a private man may do his country, is by unbiasing his mind, as much as possible, between the rival powers. Swift.

Where's the man who counsel can bestow,
Unbias'd or by favour or by spite;
Not dully prepos'd, nor blindly right? Pope.

UNBIASSEDLY. adv. Without external influence; without prejudice.

I have sought the true meaning; and have unbias'dly embraced what, upon a fair enquiry, appeared so to me. Locke.

UNBI'D. adj.

UNBI'DDEN. adj.

1. Uninvited.

Unbidden guests
Are often welcome when they are gone. Shakspeare.

2. Uncommanded; spontaneous.

Thorns also and thistles it shall bring thee forth Unbid. Milton.

Roses, unbid, and ev'ry fragrant flower,
Flew from their stalks, to strow thy nuptial bow'r.
Dryden.

Unbidden earth shall wreathing ivy bring,
And fragrant herbs, the promises of spring. Dryden.

UNBIGOTTED. adj. Free from bigotry.

Erasmus, who was an unbogotted Roman catholic, was so much transported with this passage of Socrates, that he could scarce forbear looking upon him as a saint, and desiring him to pray for him.
Addison.

TO UNBIND. v. a. [from bind.] To loose;

to untie.

His own woe's author, who bound it finds,
As did Pyrocles, and it wilfully unbinds. Spenser.

Ye Latian dames,
If there be here, who dare maintain
My right, nor think the name of mother vain,
Unbind your fillets, loose your flowing hair,
And oecus and nocturnal rites prepare. Dryden.

On the sixth instant it was thought fit to unbind his head. Tatler.

TO UNBI'SHOP. v. a. [from bishop.] To deprive of episcopal orders.

I cannot look upon Titus as so far unbishop'd yet, but that he still exhibits to us all the essentials of jurisdiction. South.

UNBITTED. adj. [from bite.] Unbridled;

unrestrained.

We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts; whereas I take this love to be a fect or eyon. Shakspeare.

UNBLAMABLE. adj. Not culpable; not to be charged with fault.

Much more could I say concerning this unblemishable inequality of lines and rates. Bacon.

He lov'd his people, him they lov'd;
And thence proceeds my mortal hatred to him;
That, thus unblameable to all beside,
He err'd to me alone. Dryden.

UNBLAMABLY. adv. Without taint of fault.

Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblameably we behaved ourselves.

UNBLAMED. adj. Blameless; free from fault.

Shall spend your days in joy unblam'd, and dwell
Long time in peace. Milton.

Unblam'd, abundance crown'd the royal board,
What time this dame rever'd her prudent lord,
Who now is doom'd to mourn. Pope.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Free from turpitude;

free from reproach; free from deformity.

O welcome, pure-ey'd faith, white-handed hope!
Thou hovering angel, girl with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity! Milton.

Under this stone lies virtue, youth,
Unblemish'd probity, and truth. Waller.

Is none worthy to be made a wife
In all this town? Suppose her free from strife, Rich, fair, and fruitful; of unblemish'd life. Dryden.

They appointed, out of these new converts, men of the best sense, and of the most unblemish'd lives;
to preside over these several assemblies. Addison.

UNBLEND. adj. Not disgraced; not injured by any foil.

There, where very desolation dwells,
She may pass on with unblend'd majesty;
Be it not done in pride, or in presumption. Milton.

UNBLENDED. adj. Not mingled.

None can boast a knowledge deposite from defilement, within this atmosphere of flesh; it dwells no where in unblended proportions on this side the empyreum. Glanville.

UNBLEST. adj.

1. Accursed; excluded from benediction.

It is a shameful and unblest thing, to take the scum of people, and wicked, condemned men, to be the people with whom you plant. Bacon.

2. Wretched; unhappy.

In thy pow'r
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton.

What is true passion, it unblest it dies?
And where is Emma's joy, if Henry flies? Prior.

UNBLOODED. adj. Not stained with blood.

Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kite soar with unbloody beak. Shakspeare.

UNBLOODY. adj. Not cruel; not shedding blood; not stained with blood.

Under the ledge of Atlas lies a cave,
The venerable seat of holy hermits,
Who there, secure in separated cells,
From the purling streams, and savage fruits,
Have wholesome bev'rage and unbloody meals. Dryden.

UNBLOWN. adj. Having the bud yet unexpanded.

Ah! my poor prince! Ah! my tender babes!
My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets!
Shakspeare.

UNBLUNT. adj. Not becoming obtuse.

A sword, whose weight without a blow might slay;
Able, unblunt, to cut hosts away. Coutley.

UNBODIED. adj.

1. Incorporeal; immaterial.

If we could conceive of things as angels and un-bodied spirits do, without involving them in those clouds of language throws upon them, we should seldom be in danger of such mistakes as are perpetually committed. Watts.

2. Freed from the body.

She lieth the bonds broke of eternal night;
Her soul unbodied of the burthenous corpse. Spenser.

All things are but alter'd, nothing dies;
And here and there th' unbody'd spirit flies. Dryden.

UNBOILED. adj. Not sodden.

A quarter of a pint of rice unboiled, will suffice to a pint boiled. Bacon.

TO UNBOLT. v. a. To set open; to unbar.

I'll call my uncle down;
He shall unbolt the gates. Shakspeare.

UNBOLTED. adj. Coarse; gross; not refined, as flower, by bolting or sifting.

I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Shakspeare.

UNBONNETED. adj. Wanting a hat or bonnet.

This night, wherein
The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry; unbosneted he runs,
And bids what will, take all. Shakspeare.

UNBOO'KISH. adj.

1. Not studious of books.

2. Not cultivated by erudition.

As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
And his unbookish jealousy must construe
Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour, Quite in the wrong. Shakspeare.

UNBO'RN. adj. Not yet brought into life;

future; being to come.

Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming tow'rd me. Shakspeare.

The woe to come, the children yet unborn
Shall feel this day, as sharp to them as thorn. Shakspeare.

Never so much as in a thought unborn,
Did I offend you. Shakspeare.

He on the wings of cherubim
Up-lit, in paternal glory rode Far into chaos, and the world unborn. Milton.

To what wretched state reserv'd!
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n
To be thus wasted from us? Milton.

A queen, from whom
The souls of kings unborn for bodies wait. Dryden.

UNBORROWED. adj. Genuine; native;

one's own.

But the luxurious father of the fold
With native purple, and unborrow'd gold,
Beneath his pompous fleece shall proudly frow. Dryden.

In substances, especially those which the common and unborrow'd names of any language are applied to, some remarkable sensible qualities serve to distinguish one from another. Locke.

TO UNBOSOM. v. a.

1. To reveal in confidence.

I lov'd thee, as too well thou knew'st,
Too well, unbosom'd all my secrets to thee,
Not out of levity, but overpower'd
By thy request, who could deny thee nothing. Milton.

Do we unbosom all our secrets to him, and hide nothing that passeth in the depth of our hearts from him? Atterbury.

2. To open; to disclose.

Should I thence, hurried on viewless wing,
Take up a weeping on the mountain wild,
The gentle neighbourhood of grove and spring
Would soon unbosom all their echoes mild. Milton.

UNBOTTOMED. adj.

1. Without bottom; bottomless.

The dark, unbottomed, infinite abyss. Milton.

2. Having no solid foundation; having no reliance.

This is a special act of christian hope, to be thus unbottomed of ourselves, and fastened upon God, with a full reliance, trust, and dependence on his mercy. Hammond.

UNBOUGHT. adj.

1. Obtained without money.

The unbought similes of the poor. Dryden.

2. Not finding any purchaser.

The merchant will leave our native commodities unbought upon the hands of the farmer, rather than 5 11 2

export them to a market which will not afford him returns with profit. Locke.

UNBOUND. adj.

1. Loose; not tied.

2. Wanting a cover: used of books.

If that has complex ideas, without particular names for them, would be in no better case than a bookseller who had volumes that lay unbound, and without titles: which he could make known to others, only by shewing the loose sheets. Locke.

3. Prerit of unbind.

Some from their chains the faithful dogs unbound. Dryden.

UNBOUND. adj.

1. Infinite; interminable.

Long were to tell what I have done;
I voyaged the unreal, vast, unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton.
The wide, th' unbounded prospect lies before me;
But shadows, clouds, and darkness rest upon it. Addison.

2. Unlimited; unrestrained.

He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes. Shakespeare.
He had given his curiosity its full, unbounded range, and examin'd not only in contemplation, but by sensitive experiment, whatever could be good for the sons of men. Decay of Piety.

UNBOUND. adv. Without bounds;
without limits.

So unboundedly mischievous is that petulant member, that heaven and earth are not wide enough for its range, but it will find work at home too. Government of the Tongue.

UNBOUNDNESS. n. f. Exemption from limits.

Finitude, applied to created things, imports the proportions of the several properties of these things to one another. Infinitude; the unboundness of these degrees of properties. Cheyne.

UNBOWED. adj. Not bent.

He knits his brow, and shews an angry eye,
And passeth by with stiff, unbowed knee,
Disclaiming duty that to us belongs. Shakespeare.

TO UNBOWEL. v. a. To exenterate; to eviscerate.

In this chapter I'll unbowel the state of the question. Halewell.

It is now become a new species of divinity, to branch out with fond distinctions our holy faith, which the pious simplicity of the first christians received to practice; not to read upon as an anatomy, unbowed and dissect to try experiments. Decay of Piety.

TO UNBRAVE. v. a.

1. To loose; to relax.

With whole reproach and odious menace,
The knight embowing in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and 'gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Spenser.

Some what of mournful sure my ears does wound;
Drums unbrac'd, with soldiers' broken cries. Dryden.

Nought shall the psaltry and the harp avail,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has unbrac'd the ear. Prior.

Wasting years, that wither human race,
Exhaust thy spirits, and thy arms unbrace. Pope.

2. To make the clothes loose.

Is it physical,
To walk unbrac'd, and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning? Shakespeare.
Händler, with his doublet all unbrac'd;
No hat upon his head, his stockings loose. Shakespeare.

Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale. Shakespeare.

UNBRED. adj.

1. Not instructed in civility; ill educated.

Unbred minds must be a little sent abroad.

Children learn from unbred or debauched servants, untowardly tricks. Locke.
Sure never any thing was so unbred as that odious man. Congreve.

2. Not taught: with to.

A warrior dame,
Unbred to spinning, in the loom unskill'd. Dryden.
UNBREECHED. adj. Having no breeches.
Looking on my boy's face, methought I did recoil

Twenty-three years, and saw myself unbreech'd,
In my green velvet coat. Shakespeare.

UNBRIED. adj. Not influenced by money or gifts; not hired.

The soul gave all:
Unbri'd it gave; or, if a bribe appear,
No less than heav'n. Dryden.

To succour the distress'd;
Unbri'd by love; untried by threats.

UNBRI'DLED. adj. Licentious; not restrained.

This is not well, rash and unbridled boy,
To fly the favours of so good a king. Shakespeare.
To what licence

Dares thy unbridled boldness run itself? B. Jonson.
We have considered religious zeal, which transgresses in unbridled excess. Spratt.

UNBROKE. adj. [from break.]

UNBROKEN. adj.

Victor's unbrotherlike heat towards the eastern churches, fomented that difference about Easter into a schism. Decay of Piety.

UNBRUISED. adj. Not bruised; not hurt.

On Dardan plains,
The fresh, and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions. Shakespeare.

Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye:
And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie;
But where unbruised youth, with unsuit brain,
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign. Shakespeare.

TO UNBUCKLE. v. a. To loose from buckles.

We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms; sifting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakespeare.
He that unbuckles this, till we do please
To doff 't for our purpose, shall hear a storm. Shakespeare.

His starry helm unbuckled, shew'd him prime
In manhood, where youth ended. Milton.

All unbuckling the rich mail they wore,
Laid their bright arms along the sable shore. Pope.

TO UNBUILD. v. a. To raise; to destroy.

This is the way to kindle, not to quench;
To unbuild the city, and to lay all flat. Shakespeare.

U N B

U N C

What will they then but unbuild
His living temples, built by faith to stand;
Their own faith, not another's? Milton.

UNBUILT. adj. Not yet erected.

Built walls you thus, unbuilt you see. Dryden.
UNBURIED. adj. Not interred; not honoured with the rites of funeral.

Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet,
To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx? Shakespeare.
The mists, which growth upon the skull of a dead man unburied, will staunch blood potently. Bacon.

Him double cares attend,
For his unburied soldiers, and his friend. Dryden.
Breathless he lies, and his unburied ghost,
Depriv'd of funeral rites, pollutes your host. Dryden.

The wand'ring ghosts
Of kings unburied on the waked coasts. Pope.

UNBURNT. adj.

1. Not consumed; not wasted; not injured by fire.

Creon denies the rites of fun'ral fires to those,
Whose breathless bodies yet he calls his toes;
Unburn'd, unburied, on a heap they lie. Dryden.

2. Not heated with fire.

Burnt wine is more hard and astringent, than wine unburnt. Bacon.

UNBURNING. adj. Not consuming by heat.

What we have said of the unburning fire called light, streaming from the flame of a candle, may easily be applied to all other light deprived of sensible heat. Dryden.

TO UNBURDEN. v. a.

1. To rid of a load.

We'll shake all cares and business from our side, Conferring them on younger strengths; while we Unburden'd crawl tow'rd death. Shakespeare.

A feign'd adversity, an insupportable
Unhappy of pity, void and empty
From any dream of mercy.* Shakespeare.

He who believes himself incapable of pardon,
goes on without any care of reforming. Hammond.
This, whilst they are under the deceit of it, makes them incapable of conviction; and they applaud themselves as zealous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error. Locke.

UNCA'RED for. adj. Not regarded; not attended to.

Their kings, to better their worldly estate, left their own and their people's ghastly condition uncared for.

UNCA'RNATE. adj. Not fleshly.

Nor need we be afraid to ascribe that to the incarnate son, which sometimes is attributed unto the uncarnate father. Brown.

To UNCA'SE. v. a.

1. To disengage from any covering.

See Pompey is uncasing for the combat. Shaksp.
Thou shalt be master, Tranio, in my sword.
'Tis hatch'd, and shall be so: Tranio, at once
Uncease thee; take my colour'd hat and cloak.

Shakspere.
Uncease me, and do with me what you please.
Addison.

2. To slay; to strip.

All men him uncas'd 'gan deride. Ilub. Tale.
Partly by his voice, and partly by his ears, the ass was discovered; and consequently uncas'd, well laughed at, and well cudgelled. L'Estrange.

UNCA'UGHT. adj. Not yet caught.

Let him fly far;
Not in this land shall he remain uncaught;
And found, dispatch'd. Shakspere.
His bosom glows with treasures yet uncaught.
Gay.

UNCA'USED. adj. Having no precedent cause.

UNCA'UTIONS. adj. Not wary; heedless.

Unforeseen, they say, is unprepar'd:
Uncautions Arcite thought himself alone. Dryden.

UNCE'LEBRATED. adj. Not solemnized.

Thus was the first day, ev'n and morn;
Nor pass'd uncelebrated, nor untong
By the celestial chora. Milton.

UNCE'NSURED. adj. Exempt from publick reproach.

How difficult must it be for any ruler to live uncensured, where every one of the community is thus qualified for modelling the constitution! Addison.

Fear most to tax an honourable fool,
Whole right it is uncensur'd to be dull. Pope.

To be uncensured, and to be obscure, is the same thing. Pope.

UNCERTAIN. adj. [uncertain, Fr. incertus,
Latin.]

1. Doubtful; not certainly known.

That sacred pile, so vast, so high,
That whether 'tis a part of earth or sky,
Uncertain seems; and may be thought a proud Aspiring mountain, or descending cloud. Denham.

2. Doubtful; not having certain knowledge.

Man, without the protection of a superior being, is secure of nothing that he enjoys, and uncertain of every thing that he hopes for. Tillotson.

Condemn'd on Cacusas to lie,
Still to be dying, not to die;
With certain pain, uncertain of relief,
True emblem of a wretched lover's grief. Graville.

3. Not sure in the consequence.

I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass:
Nurture her brothers, and then marry her!
Uncertain way of gain! Shakspere.

In the bright air the faulchion shone,
Or whistling sings dismiss'd th' uncertain stone. Gay.

The search of our future being is but a needless, anxious, and uncertain business; for we know, sooner than we can, what, whilst all this solicitude, we shall know a little later. Pope.

4. Not exact; not sure.

Africanus young, and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain in his aim;
But the dire bend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting sides. Dryden.

5. Unsettled; unregular.

As the form of our publick service is not voluntary, so neither are the parts thereof uncertain; but they are all set down in such order, and with such choice, as hath, in the wisdom of the church, seem'd best. Hooker.

UNCERTAINED. adj. Made uncertain.

A word not used.

The diversity of senses are not so uncertained by the sun and moon alone, who always keep one and the same course, but that the stars have also their working therein. Raleigh.

UNCERTAINLY. adv.

1. Not surely; not certainly.

Go, mortals, now, and vex yourselves in vain
For wealth, which so uncertainly must come:
When what was brought to stir, and with such pain,
Was only kept to lose it nearer home. Dryden.
Names must be of very unsteady meaning, if the ideas be referred to standards without us, that cannot be known at all, or but very imperfectly and uncertainly. Locke.

2. Not confidently.

They that are past all hope of good, are past
All fear of ill; and yet, if he be dead,
Speak softly, or uncertainly. Denham.

UNCERTAINTY. n. f.

1. Dubiousness; want of knowledge.

All great concerns must delays endure;
Rashness and haste make all things unsecure:
And if uncertain thy pretensions be,
Stay till fit time wear out uncertainty. Denham.
You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate,
Here then remain with your uncertainty;
Let ev'ry feeble rumour shake your hearts. Shaksp.

2. Inaccuracy.

That which makes doubtfulness and uncertainty
in the signification of some, more than other words, is the difference of ideas they stand for. Locke.

3. Contingency; want of certainty.

God's omniscience is a light shining into every dark corner, steadfastly grasping the greatest and most slippery uncertainty. South.

4. Something unknown.

Our shepherd's care is every man's case, that quits a moral certainty for an uncertainty, and leaps from the honest balance he was brought up to, into a trade he has no skill in. L'Estrange.

To UNCHA'IN. v. a. To free from chains.

Minerva thus to Perseus lent her shield,
Secure of conquest, sent him to the field:
The hero asked what the queen ordain'd;
So was his fame complete, and Andromeda unchain'd. Prior.

UNCHA'NGEABLE. adj. Immutably; not subject to variation.

If the end for which a law provideth, be perpetually necessary, and the way whereby it provideth perpetually also most apt, no doubt but that every such law ought for ever to remain unchangeable.
Hooker.

UNCHA'NGEABLENESS. n. f. Immutability.

This unchangeableness of colour I am now to describe. Newton.

UNCHA'NGEABLY. adv. Immutably;
without change.

All truth is unchangeably the same; that proposition, which is true at any time, being so for ever.
South.

Her first order, disposition, frame,
Must then subsist unchangeably the same. Blackm.

UNCHA'NGED. adj.

1. Not altered.

When our fortunes are violently changed, our spirits are unchanged. Taylor.

More safe I sing with mortal voice
To honour, or to mate. unchang'd. Milton.

2. Not alterable.

Dismiss thy fear,
And heav'n's unchang'd decrees attentive hear:
More pow'ful gods have torn thee from thy skin. Dryden.

Honour unchang'd, a principle profess,
Fixt to one side, but mod'rate to the rest. Pope.

UNCHA'NGING. adj. Suffering no alteration.

But that thy face is, visor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would essay, proud quon, to make thee blush. Shakspere.

True expression, like th' unchanging sun,
Clears and improves whatever it shines upon:
It gilds all objects, but it alters none. Pope.

To UNCHA'NGE. v. a. To retract an ac-culation.

Even his mother shall unchange the practice,
And call it accident. Shakspere.

UNCHA'RITABLE. adj. Contrary to charity; contrary to the universal love prescribed by christianity.

All the rich mines of learning ransack'd are
To furnish ammunition for this war;
Uncharitable zeal our reason whets,
And double edges on our passion sets. Denham.

This fills the minds of weak men with uncharitable interpretations of those actions of which they are not competent judges. Addison.

UNCHA'RITABLENESS. n. f. Want of charity.

The penitence of the criminal may have num-ber'd him among the saints, when our unretreated *uncharitable*ness may lend us to unquenchable flames. Government of the Tongue.

God commands us to love our enemies, so that if we hate them we sin, and are justly kept back by our own *uncharitable*ness. Kettwell.

Heaven and hell are the proper regions of mercy and *uncharitable*ness. Atterbury.

UNCHA'RITABLY. adv. In a manner contrary to charity.

I did not mean the cutting off all that nation with the sword; which, far be it from me that I should ever think to desperately, or with so uncharitably.
Spenser.

Urgo neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd. Shakspere.

Men, imprudently and uncharitably often, employ their zeal for persons. Sparr.

UNCHA'RY. adj. Not wary; not cautious; not frugal.

I've find too much unto a heart of stone,
And laid my honour too unchary out. Shakspere.

UNCHA'STE. adj. Lewd; libidinous; not continent; not chaste; not pure.

One, that in divers places I had heard before blazed, as the most impudently unchaste woman of all Asia. Sidney.

In my master's garments,
Which he stole from me, away he poils
With unchaste purposes, to violate
My lady's honour. Shakspere.

Whoever is unchaste, cannot reverence himself;
and the reverence of a man's self is, next religion,
the chiefest bridle of all vices. Bacon.

Lust, by unchaste looks,
Lets in desilement to the inward parts. Milton.

If the things to be separated by reason of her husband's unchaste life, then the man will be un-creably ruined. Taylor.

UNCHA'STITY. n. f. Lewdness; incon-tinence.

That generation was more particularly addicted to Intemperance, sensuality, and unchastity. Woodward.

When the sun is among the horned signs, he may produce such a spirit of unchastity, as is dangerous to the honour of your worships' families. Arbucknot.

UNCH'E'CKED. adj.

1. Unrestrained; not hindered.

Apt the mind, or fancy, is to rove
Unchek'd, and of her roving is no end. Milton.

Then on the wing thy uncheck'd vigour bore,
To wander freely, or securely soar.
Smith to J. Phillips.

3. Not contradicted.

What news on the Ryalto?
—Why, yet it lives there uncheck'd, that Antonio hath a ship of rich lading wreck'd. Shaksp.
UNCHECK'DFULNESS. n. f. Melancholy; gloominess of temper.

Mary, by a natural uncheerfulness of heart, love to indulge this uncomfortable way of life. Spectator.

With unchew'd morsels, while he churns the gure.
Druden.

To UNCHIL'D. v. a. To deprive of children.

He hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakspere.
UNCHRISTIAN. adj.

1. Contrary to the laws of christianity.
It's inhuman, unchristian, and inhuman, to pass a peremptory sentence of condemnation upon a try'd friend, where there is any room left for a more favourable judgment. L'Estrange.

These unchristian fathers of men are fatally caught in their own nets. South.
I could dispense with the unphilosophicalness of this hypothesis, were it not unchristian.
Norris.

2. Unconverted; infidel.

Whereupon grew a question, whether a christian soldier might herein do as the unchristian did, and wear as they wore. Hooker.

UNCHRISTIANNESS. n. f. Contrariety to christianity.

The unchristianness of those denials might arise from a displeasure to see me prefer my own divines before their ministers. King Charles.

UNCIRCUMCISED. adj. Not circumcised; not a Jew.

Th' uncircumcis'd snail'd grimly with disdain.
Cowley.

UNCIRCUMCISION. n. f. Omission of circumcision.

God, that gives the law that a Jew shall be circumcised, thereby constitutes uncircumcision an obliquity; which, had he not given that law, had never been such. Hammond.

UNCIRCUMSCRIBED. adj. Unbounded; unlimited.

Though I, uncircumscrib'd myself, retire,
And put not forth my goodness. Milton.

An arbitrary prince is the master of a non-resisting people; for where the power is uncircumscrib'd, the obedience ought to be unlimited. Addison.

The sovereign was flattered by a set of men into a persuasion that the regal authority was unlimited and uncircumscrib'd. Addison.

UNCIRCUMSPECT. adj. Not cautious; not vigilant.

Their uncircumspect simplicity had been used, especially in matters of religion. Hayward.

UNCIRCUMSTANTIAL. adj. Unimportant.

A bad word.
The like particulars, although they seem uncircumstantial, are oft set down in holy scripture. Brown.

UNCIVIL. adj. [incivil, Fr. incivilis, Lat.] Unpolite; not agreeable to rules of elegance, or complaisance.

Your undartful, uncivil, and uncharitable dealing in this your book, hath detected you. Whitgift.

They love me well, yet I have much to do, To keep me from uncivil outrages. Shakspere.

My friends are so unreasonable, that they would have me be uncivil to him. Spectator.

UNCIVILIZED. adj.

1. Not reclaimed from barbarity.
But we, brave Britons, foreign laws despis'd,
And kept unconquer'd, and uncivilis'd:
Fierce for the liberties of wit, and bold,
We still defy'd the Romans, as of old. Pope.

2. Coarse; indecent.

Several, who have been pelished in France, make use of the most coarse, uncivilis'd words in our language. Addison.

UNCIVILLY. adv. Unpolitely, not comfortably.

him no good, to wait it unto as shall trust unto it.

Subdued, undone, they did at last obey,
And change them own for their invaders way.

Where, with like haste, though several ways
they ran,

Some to us, and some to be undone.

Either ye come, or I die, and to us
The physics, and do, and the poet too.

When I behold the charming maid,
I'm ten times more undone; while hope and fear

With variety of pain do, of me.

2. To lose; to open what is shut or fastened; to unravel.

They fall and tear at do their hands undo;
Brother, his brother, mead doth friend forsake.

Pray, undid it better

We improve thy powerful hand,
To us, the charmed hand

Of true virtue, be directed

Where men to do, they could not see
That have printed, should they flee,
Like simple birds, into a net,
So grossly woven, and ill-set,

Heaven's teeth would undo the knot,
And let all go that had got.

3. To change any thing done to its former state; to recall, or annul any action.

They may know, that we are for from presuming to think that men can better any thing which God hath done, even as we are from thinking, that men should presume to undo some things of men, which God doth know they cannot better.

It was a ruin

To lay upon the ruin'd, which Sycorax
Could not undo.

We're ambitious God's whole work to undo,
Of nothing he made us, and we thrive, too.

To bring our backs to nothing back,
They make the Derry do and undo, go forward and backwards.

By granting me to do on,

He has the merit of the gift undone.

Without the our repentance is not real, because we have not done what we can to undo our fault.

Now will this woman, with a fly do glance,
Undo what I've been labouring all this while

When in time the mortal mind
Found out the trick that Venus play'd,
She made the trick, the knave's trick,
A trick, and with indignation, says,
To-morrow, ere the setting sun,
She'll undo the trick that she had done.

UNDOUBTED, adj. Indubitable; indisputable; unquestionable.

His fact, till now, came not to an undoubted proof. Shakespeare.

Thou, Spirit, who led'st this glorious evenue
Into the desert, his victorious field, Against the spiritual foe, and brought'st him thence,
By proof th' undoubted Son of God, inspire Milton.
The relations of your trials may be received as undoubted records of certain events, and as securely to be depended on as the propositions of Euclid. Glanville.

Made the world tremble with a numerous host,
And of undoubted victory did boast. Waller.

Though none of these be strict demonstration, yet we have an undoubted assurance of them, when they are proved by the best arguments that the nature of the thing will bear. Tillotson.

UNDOUBTEDLY, adv. Indubitably; without question; without doubt.

Some sank undoubtedly there is in the very resemblance of idolaters. Hooker.

Four pounds of undried hops, thorough ripe, will make one of dry. Mortimer.

UNDIVEN, adj. Not impelled either way.

As wintry winds contending in the sky,
With equal force blunging their titles try;
The doubtful rack of heav'n
Stands without motion, and the tide undriv'n. Dryden.

UNDROSSY, adj. Free from recreation.

When a noontide sun with summer beams
Darts through a cloud, her watry skirts are edg'd
With lucid amber, or undrossy gold. Philips.

Of heav'n's undrossy gold, the gods' array Refulgent, shall'd intolerable day. Pope.

UNDUBITABLE, adj. Not admitting doubt; unquestionable.

Let that principle, that all is matter, and that there is nothing else, be received for certain and undubitable, and it will be easy to be seen, what consequences it will lead us into. Locke.

To drive backward and forward; to make to play as waves.

Breath vocalized, i. e. vibrated and undulated,
may in a different manner affect the lips, or tongue,
or palate, and impress a twist, tremulous motion,
which breath alone passing smooth doth not. Holder.

TO UNULATE, v. n. To play as waves in curls.

Through undulating air the sounds are sent,
And spread o'er all the fluid element. Pope.

UNDULATION, n. f. [from undulate.]

Waving motion.

Worms and leeches will move both ways; and so will most of those animals whose bodies consist of round and annular fibres, and move by undulation, that is, like the waves of the sea. Brown.

All tuneable sounds are made by a regular vibration of the sonorous body, and undulation of the air, proportionable to the acuteness and gravity of the tone. Holder.

Two parallel walls beat the sound back on each other, till the undulation is quite worn out. Addison.

UNDULATORY, adj. [from undulate.]

Moving in the manner of waves.

A constant undulatory motion is perceived by looking through telescopes. Arbutnot.

That waits the means to lead it. Shakespeare.

Themselves they vilify'd,
To serve ungovern'd appetite. Milton.

Nor what to bid, or what to bid, he knows;
Th' ungovern'd tempest to such fury grows. Dryden.

From her own back the burthen would remove,
And lays the load on his ungovern'd love. Dryden.

UNGRACEFUL. adj. Wanting elegance; wanting beauty.

Raphael answer'd heav'n,
Nor art thou less ungraceful, fine of men. Milton.

A foolishness watchfulness about one's behaviour, instead of being mended, it will be confirmed, uneasy, and ungraceful. Locke.

He enjoyed the greatest strength of good sense, and the most exquisite taste of politeness. Without the fit, learning is but an incumbrance; and without the best is ungraceful. Addison.

UNGRACEFULNESS. n. f. Inelegance;
awkwardness.

To attempt the putting another genius upon him, will be labour in vain; and what is so planttered on, will have always hanging to it the ungracefulness of constraint. Locke.

UNGRACIOUS. adj.

1. Wicked; odious; hateful.

He, catching hold of her ungracious tongue,
Thereon an iron lock did fasten firm and strong. Spenser.

I'll, in the mature time,
With this ungracious paper strike the sight
Of the death-practis'd duke. Shakespeare.

Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
Shew me the steep and thorny way to heav'n;
Whilst he, a puffed and reckless libertine,
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
And reeks not his own rede. Shakespeare.

To the gods alone
Our future offspring, and our wives are known;
Th' audacious trumpet, and ungracious son. Dryden.

2. Offensive; unpleasing.

Show the no parts which are ungracious to the fight, as all proportionings usually are. Dryden.
Neither is it rare to observe among excellent and learned divines, a certain ungracious manner, or an unhappy tone of voice, which they never have been able to shake off. Swift.

3. Unacceptable; not favoured.

They did not except against the persons of any,
though several were with ungracious to them. Clarendon.

Any thing of grace towards the Irish rebels, was as ungracious at Oxford as at London. Clarendon.

UNGRAMMATICAL. adj. Not according to grammar.

UNGRANTED. adj. Not given; not yielded; not bestowed.

This only from your goodness let me gain,
And this ungranted, all rewards are vain. Dryden.

UNGRATEFUL. adj.

1. Making no returns, or making ill returns for kindness.

No person is remarkably ungrateful, who was not also miserably proud. South.

2. Making no returns for culture.

Most when divin'd by winds, the flaming storm
Of the long files d'roy's the beauteous form;
Nor will the wither'd flock be green again;
But the wild olive shoots, and shades th' ungrateful plain. Dryden.

3. Unpleasing; unacceptable.

It cannot be ungrateful, or without some pleasure to posterity, to see the most exact relation of an action to full of danger. Clarendon.

What is in itself harsh and ungrateful, must make harsh and ungrateful impressions upon us. Atterbury.

UNGRATEFULLY. adv.

1. With ingratitude.

When call'd to distant war,
His vanquish'd heart remain'd a victim here:
Orana's eyes that glorious conquest made,
Nor was his love ungratefully repaid. Granville.

We often receive the benefit of our prayers when yet we ungratefully charge heaven with a-nying our petitions. Male.

2. Unacceptably; unpleasingly.

UNGRATEFULNESS. n. f.

1. Ingratitude; ill return for good.

Can I, without the detestable stain of ungrate-fulness, abstain from loving him, who, far excelling the beautifulness of his shape with the beautifulness of his mind, is content to so noble himself as to become Demetrius's servant for my sake? Seneca.

2. Unacceptableness; unpleasing quality.

UNGRAVELY. adv. Without seriousness.

His present portance
Gibingly, and ungravely, he did fashion. Shakespeare.

UNGROUND. adj. Having no foundation.

Ignorance, with an indifference for truth, is nearer to it than opinion with ungrounded inclination, which is the great source of error. Taylor.

This is a confidence the most ungrounded and irrational. For upon what ground can a man presume himself a future repentance, who cannot presume himself a future? South.

UNGROUNDINGLY. adv. Without ill-will.

willingly; heartily; cheerfully.

If, when all his art and time is spent,
He say 'twill ne'er be found, yet be content;
Receive from him the doom ungroundingly. Denne.

UNGUARDED. adj.

1. Undefended.

Proud art thou met? Thy hope was to have reach'd

The throne of God unguarded, and his side Abandon'd. Milton.

All through th' unguarded gates with joy return, To see the flighted camp, the vacant port. Denne.

The door there was the unguarded hand to keep.
On swelling things that seek to break the keep.

2. Careless; negligent; not attentive to danger.

All the evils that proceed from an untied tongue, and an unguarded, unlimited will, we put upon the accounts of drunkenness.

The spy, which does this treasure keep,
Does she ne'er say her pray'r, nor sleep?
Or have not gold and flattery pow'r
To purchase one unguarded hour?

With an unguarded look the now devout'd
My nearer face; and now recall'd her eye,
And heav'd, and strove to hide a sudden sigh.

It was intended only to divert a few young ladies, of good sense and good humour enough to laugh not only at their sex's little unguarded follies, but at their own.

Are we not encompassed by multitudes, who watch every careless word, every unguarded action of our lives?

UNGUENT. n. f. [unguentum, Latin.] Ointment.

Pre-occupation of mind every requireth preface of speech, like a fomentation to make the unguent enter.

There is an intercourse between the magnetic unguent and the vulnerated body.

UNGUISHED. adj. Not attained by conjecture.

He me sent, for cause to me unguish'd.
UNGUIDED. adj. Not directed; not regulated.

The blood weeps from my heart, when I do shape,

In forms imaginary, th' unguided days
And rotten times that you shall look upon,
When I am sleeping with my ancestors.

They resolve all into the accidental, unguided notions of blind matter.

Does by unguided motion things produce,
Regardless of their order.

UNHABITABLE. adj. [inhabitable, French; inhabitabilis, Lat.] Not capable to support inhabitants; uninhabitable.

The night and day was always a natural day of twenty-four hours, in all places remote from the uninhabitable poles of the world, and winter and summer always measured a year.

Though the course of the sun be curbed between the tropicks, yet are not those parts directly subject to his perpendicular beams, uninhabitable, or extremely hot.

UNHACKED. adj. Not cut; not hewn; not notched with cuts.

With a blessed and unwe'd retire,
With unhack'd fowls, and helmets all unbruised,
We will bear home that lusty blood again.

Part with unhack'd edges, and bear back
Our large undinted.

To UNHALLOW. v. a. To deprive of holiness; to profane; to desecrate.

Perhaps the fact
Is not so heinous now, forsaken fruit,
Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first Made common, and unhallow'd, ere our taste.

The vainly unhallows the virtue.

This one use left such an indelible sacredness upon them, that the impiety of the design could be no sufficient reason to unhallow and degrade them to common use.

UNHALLOWED. adj. Unholy; profane.

Thy earthy spirit
Governs a wolf, who bang'd for human slaughter:
Ev'n from the gutters did his fell soul feet;

And while then lay'd in thy unhallow'd den
Infer'd that in thee.

I had not thought to have unlock'd my lips
In this unhallow'd air, but that this juggler
Would think to charm my judgment, as mine eyes
Obtruding false rules, prank'd in reason's garb.

Nor shall presume to violate these bands,
Or touch thy person with unhallow'd hands.

Here cease thy sight, nor with unhallow'd lays Touch the fair fane of Albion's golden days.

To UNHAND. v. a. To loose from the hand.

A happy gentleman in blood and lineament,
By you unhappied, and disfigur'd clean.

UNHAPPILY. adv. [from unhappy.] Miserably; unfortunately; wretchedly; calamitously.

You hold a fair assembly, you do well, lord.
You are a churchman, or I'll tell you, cardinal,
I should judge now most unhappily.

He was unhappily too much used as a check upon the lord Coventry.

I unwitting have offended,
Unhappily deceiv'd

There is a day a coming, when all those witty fools shall be unhappily undeceived.

UNHAPPINESS. n. f.

1. Misery; infelicity.

If ever we have child, abortive be it,
Prodigious, and untimely brought to light,
And that be heir to his unhappiness!

The real foundation of our unhappiness would be laid in our reason, and we should be more miserable than the beasts, by how much we have a quicker apprehension.

It is our great unhappiness, when any calamities fall upon us, that we are uneasy and dissatisfied.

2. Misfortune; ill luck.

St. Austin hath laid down a rule to this purpose, though he had the unhappiness not to follow it always himself.

3. Mischievous prank.

She hath often dream'd of unhappiness, and waked herself with laughing.

UNHAPPY. adj.

1. Wretched; miserable; unfortunate; calamitous; distressed. Of persons or things.

Whole to myself, unharmed abroad,
Fearless at home. Milton.

UNHEALTHFUL. adj. Morbid; unwholesome.

The diseases which make years unhealthful, are spotted fevers; and the unhealthful season is the autumn. Graunt.

At every sentence set his life at stake,
Though the discourse were of no weightier things
Than sultry summers, or unhealthful springs. Dryden.

UNHEALTHY. adj. Sickly; wanting health.

No body would have a child cramm'd at breakfast, who would not have him dull and unhealthy. Locke.

He, intent on somewhat that may ease
Unhealthy mortals, and with curious search Examines all the properties of herbs. Philips.

UNHEARD. adj.

1. Not perceived by the ear.
For the noise of drums and timbrels loud,
Their children's cries unheard. Milton.

To stuff this maw, this vast unhibounded corps. Milton.

To UNHINGE. v. a.
1. To throw from the hinges.

2. To displace by violence.
For want of cement, ribs of rock disjoin'd
Without an earthquake, from their base would start,
And hills unking'd, from their deep roots depart. Blackmore.

3. To disorder; to confuse.
Rather than not accomplish my revenge
Just or unjust, I would the world unking. Waller.

If God's providence did not order it, cheats would not only juggle private men out of their rights, but unking'd states, and run all into confusion. Ray.

UNHOLINESS. n. f. Impiety; profaneness; wickedness.

Too foul and manifest was the unholiness of oltruding upon men remission of sins for money. Raleigh.

UNHOLY. adj.
1. Profane; not hallowed.

are unholy, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hooker.

From the paradise of God,
Without remorse, drive out the sinful pair,
From hallow'd ground th' unholy. Milton.

2. Impious; wicked.
We think not ourselves the holier, because we use it; so neither should they with whom no such thing is in use, think us therefore unholy, because we submit ourselves unto that which, in a matter so indifferent, the wisdom of authority and law have thought comely. Hooker.

Far other dreams my erring soul employ;
Far other raptures of unholy joy. Pope.

UNHONOURED. adj.
1. Not regarded with veneration; not celebrated.

Unhonour'd though I am, at least, said she,
Not unreveng'd that impious act shall be. Dryden.

Pales unhonour'd, Ceres unemploy'd,
Were all forgot. Dryden.

Whose naked natures live in all the sight
Of wrenful heav'n; whose bare, unhoused trunks,
To the conflicting elements expos'd,
Answer mere nature. Shakespeare.

2. Having no settled habitation.
But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhoused, free condition
Put into circumscription and confine. Shakespeare.

Hear this,
You unhous'd, lawless, rambling libertines! Southey.

UNHOUSSELL. adj. Having not the sacrament.

Thus was I sleeping, by a brother's hand,
Of life, of crown, of queen at once dispos'd,
Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhous'd, unanointed, unanell'd. Shakespeare.

UNHUMBLED. adj. Not humbled; not touched with shame or confusion.

Should I of these the liberty regard,
Who freed, as to their ancient patrimony,
Unhumbled, unrepented, unreformed, Headlong would follow? Milton.

UNHURT. adj. Free from harm.
Of fifteen hundred, eight hundred were slain in the field; and of the remaining seven hundred, two men only came off unhurt. Bacon.

UNION. n. s. [unio, Latin.]

1. The act of joining two or more, so as to make them one.

Adam, from whose dear side I boast me sprung,
And glad of our union hear thee speak,
One heart, one soul, in both! Milton.
One kingdom, joy, and union without end. Milton.

2. Concord; conjunction of mind or interests.

The experience of those profitable emanations from God, most commonly are the first motive of our love; but when we once have tasted his goodness, we love the spring for its own excellency, passing from considering ourselves, to an union with God. Taylor.

3. A pearl. Not in use.

The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;
And in the cup an union shall he throw,
Richer than that which four successive kings
In Denmark's crown have worn. Shakspeare.

4. In law.

Union is a combining or consolidation of two churches in one, which is done by the consent of the bishop, the patron, and incumbent. And this is properly called an union; but there are two other sorts, as when one church is made subject to the other, and when one man is made prelate of both, and when a conventual is made cathedral. Touching union in the first signification, there was a statute, an. 37 Hen. VIII. chap. 21. that it should be lawful in two churches, whereof the value of the one is not above six pounds in the king's books, of the first fruits, and not above one mile distant from the other. Union in this signification is personal, and that is for the life of the incumbent; or real, that is, perpetual, whosoever is incumbent. Cowell.

UNI'PAROUS. adj. [unus and pario.]

Bringing one at a birth.

Others make good the paucity of their breed with the duration of their days, whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous. Brown.

Sounding along.

Sounds intermin'd with voice Choral, or unison. Milton.

UNISON. n. s.

1. A string that has the same sound with another.

When moved matter meets with any thing like that from which it received its primary impulse, it will in like manner move it, as in musical strings tuned unison. Glanville.

2. A single unvaried note.

Let was the nation's song, not could be found,
While a long solemn unison went round. Pope.

Disjointed, a sort union of ideas,
From their side, yet unjoined with organs. Mar.

UNIT. n. s. [unus, unitas, Latin.] One; the least number; or the root of numbers.

If any atom should be moved mechanically, without attraction, 'tis above a hundred million millions odds to an unit, that it would not strike upon any other atom, but glide through an empty interval without contact. Bentley.

Units are the integral parts of any large number. Watts.

To UNIT. v. a. [unitas, Latin.]

1. To join two or more into one.

The force which went in two to be dispersed, in one alone right hand he now unites. Spenser.

Suppose an uniter of a middle constitution, that should partake of some of the qualities of both. Glanville.

UNITION. n. s. [union, French; from unite.] The act or power of uniting; conjunction; coalition. A word proper, but little used.

As long as any different substance keeps off the union, hope not to cure a wound. Weyman.

UNITIVE. adj. [from unite.] Having the power of uniting.

That can be nothing else but the unitive way of religion, which consists of the contemplation and love of God. Norris.

UNITY. n. s. [unitas, Latin.]

1. The state of being one.

Those heretics introduced a plurality of gods; and so made the profession of the unity part of the symbolism, that should discriminate the orthodox from them. Hammond.

The production of one being the destruction of another, although they generate, they increase not, and must not be said to multiply, who do not transcend an unity. Brown.

Man is to be great
Like of his like; his image multiply'd:
In unity defective; which requires Collective love, and dependent unity.

Or, if they force you, force you, did not, did.
And in their height of kindness, are unkind. Young.

UNKINDLY, adj. [see and kind.]
1. Unnatural; contrary to nature.

They, with their stiffness,
Polluted this fane gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beautiliness,
And 'gan abhor her blood's unkindly crime.
All were they born of her own native slime. Spenser.

2. Malignant; unfavourable.

The goddess, that in rural shrine
Dwell'd here with Pan, or Sylvan, by blest song Forbidding every bleak, unkindly fog
To touch the prosperous growth of this tall wood. Milton.

UNKINDLY, adv.

1. Without kindness; without affection.

The herd, unkindly from him flies.
Or chases him from thence, or of his flies. Denham.

If we unkindly part,
Will not the poor fond creature break her heart? Dryden.

2. Contrarily to nature.

All works of nature,
Abortive, monstrous, or unkindly mix'd. Milton.
UNKINDNESS, n. f. [from unkind.] Malignity; ill-will; want of affection.

Take no unkindness of his hasty words. Shaksp.
His unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Shakspere.

After their return, the duke executed the same authority in conferring all favours, and in revenging himself upon those who had manifested any unkindness towards him. Clarendon.

Ever—As one who loves, and some unkindness meets.

With sweet, austere composure, thus reply'd. Milt.
Christ, who wast the only person to have refused this unkindness, finds an extenuation of it. South.

She sigh'd, she wept, she low'd; 'twas all the con'd;
And with unkindness seem'd to tax the god. Dryden.

TO UNKING, v. a. 'To deprive of royalty.

God save king Henry, unking'd Richard says,
And send him many years of sunshine days! Shak.
It takes the force of law: how then, my lord!
If as they would unking my father now,
To make you way. Southern.

UNKISS'D, adj. Not kissed.

Foul words are but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noxious; therefore I will depart unkind. Shakspere.

UNKLE, n. f. [uncle, Fr.] The brother of one's father or mother. See UNCLE.

The English power is near, led on by Malcolm,
His uncle Siward, and the good Macduff. Shaksp.
Give me good fame, ye pow'r'd and make me just:
Thus much the rogue o' public ears will trust:

To private then:—When wilt thou, mighty Jove!
My wealthy unkle from this world remove? Dryden.

UNKIGHTLY, adj. Unbecoming a knight.

With six hours hard riding through wild places,
I overgot them a little before night, near an old ill-favoured castle, the place where I perceived they sought to perform their unknighly errand. Sidney.

TO UNKNIT, v. a.

1. To unweave; to separate.
Would he had continued to his country
As he began, and not unknit himself
The noble knot he made! Shakspere.

2. To open.

Unknit that threat'ning, unkind brow,
And dart not scornful glances from those eyes. Shak.

TO UNKNOW, v. a. To cease to know.

It's already known;
Oh! can you keep it from yourselves, unknown it?
Smith.

UNKNOWABLE, adj. Not to be known.

Distinction well between knowables and unknowables. Watts.

UNKNOWING, adj.

1. Ignorant; not knowing: with of.

Let us look to it, yet unknownly, what
How these things came about. Shakspere.
Though unknown persons may accuse others,
yet can they never the more absolve themselves.

Unknowing I prepar'd thy bridal bed;
With empty hopes of happy issue fed. Dryden.

Unknowing he requires it; and when known,
He thinks it his; and values it, 'tis gone. Dryden.
His hounds, unknowing of his change, pursue
The chase, and their mistaken master slew. Dryd.

Proteus, mounting from the hoary deep,
Surveys his charge, unknowing of deceit. Pope.

2. Not practised; not qualified.

So Lybian huntswen, on some sandy plain,
From study covert rout'd, the lion chase:
The kingly beast roars out with loud disdain,
And slowly moves, unknowing to give place. Dryden.

These were they, whose souls the furies steel'd,
And curs'd with hearts unknowing how to yield. Pope.

UNKNOWINGLY, adv. Ignorantly; without knowledge.

The beauty I behold has struck me dead:
Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance. Dryden.

They are like the Syrians, who were first smitten with blindness, and unknowingly led out of their way, into the capital of their enemy's country. Addison.

UNKNOW'N, adj.

1. Not known.

'Tis not unknown to you,
How much I have dishab'd my estate. Shakspere.
Many are the trees of God, that grow
In Paradise, and various, yet unknown
To us. Milton.

Here may I always on this downy grass,
Unknown, unseen, my easy minutes pass! Roscom.

If any chance has hither brought the name
Of Palatides, not unknown to fame,

Accus'd and sentenc'd for pretended crimes. Dryd.

Though incest is indeed a deadly crime,
You are not guilty, since unknown 'twas done,

And, known, had been abhor'd. Dryden.

At fear of death, that saddens all
With terrors round, can reason hold her throne;
Despise the known, nor tremble at th' unknown? Pope.

2. Greater than is imagined.

The planting of hemp and flax would be an unknown advantage to the kingdom. Bacon.

3. Not having cohabitation.

I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsworn. Shaksp.

4. Not having communication.

At a little inn, the man of the house, formerly a servant in the family, to do honour to his old master, had, unknown to sir Roger, put him up in a sign-post. Addison.

UNLABOURED, adj.

1. Not produced by labour.

Unlaboured harvests shall the fields adorn,
And cluster'd grapes shall blush on ev'ry thorn. Dryden.

2. Not cultivated by labour.

Not eastern monarchs, on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple shine to gay,
As the bright natives of th' unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd. Blackmore.

3. Spontaneous; voluntary.

Their charms, if charms they have, the truth supplies,
And from the theme unlabour'd beauties rise. Tickel.

TO UNLACE, v. a.

1. To loose any thing fastened with strings.

He could not endure so cruel case,
But thought his arms to leave, and helmet to un-lace. Spenser.

A little river roll'd,
By which there sat a knight with helm unlac'd,
Himself refreshing with the liquid cold.

The helmet from my brow unlac'd. Pope.

2. To loose a woman's dress.

Can I think, when they in prison placing her,
With twining arms in mine, and one dissembling,
She lay for dead, till I help'd with unloosing her? Sidney.

Unlace yourself, for that haggardous chime
Tells me from you, that now it is bed-time. Dumas.

3. To divest of ornaments.

You unlace your reputation,
And spend your rich opinion for the name
Of a night-brawler. Shakspere.

TO UNLAC'D, v. a.

1. To remove from the vessel which carries.

He's a foolish seaman,
That, when his ship is sinking, will not Unlace his hopes into another bottom. Denham.

2. To exonerate that which carries.

The vent'rous merchant, who design'd for far,
And touches on our hospitable shore,
Charm'd with the splendour of this northern star,
Shall here unlac'd him, and depart no more. Dryd.

3. To put out. Used of a vessel.

We landed at Tyre; for there the ship was to unlace her burden. Act.

UNLAC'D, adj.

1. Not placed; not fixed.

Whatsoever we do behold now in this present world, it was unwrapped within the bowels of divine mercy, written in the book of eternal wisdom, and held in the hands of omnipotent power, the first foundations of the world being as yet unlac'd. Hooker.

2. Not pacified; not stilled; not suppressed.

No evil thing that walks by night,
Blind, meagre hag, or stubborn unlaid ghost,
Hath hurtful pow'r o'er true virginity. Milton.

UNLAMENTED, adj. Not deplored.

After six years spent in outward opulency, and inward murmur that it was not greater, he died unlamented by any. Clarendon.

Thus unlamented pass the proud away,
The pride of fools, and pageant of a day. Pope.

TO UNLATCH, v. a. To open by lifting up the latch.

My worthy wife
The door unlatch'd; and, with repeated calls, Invites her former lord within my walls. Dryden.

UNLAWFUL, adj. Contrary to law; not permitted by the law.

Before I be convict by course of law,
To threaten me with death is most unlawful. Shakspere.

It is an unlawful thing for a Jew to curse into one of another nation. Act.

Shew me when it is our duty, and when unlawful, to take these courses, by some general rule of a perpetual, never-failing truth. South.

The secret ceremonies I conceal,
Uncouth, perhaps unlawful to reveal. Dryden.

UNLAWFULLY, adv.

1. In a manner contrary to law or right.

He that gains all that he can lawfully this year,
next year will be tempted to gain something unlawfully. Taylor.

2. Illegitimately; not by marriage.

I had rather my brother die by the law, than my son should be unlawfully born. Shakspere.
Give me your opinion, what part I, being unlawfully born, may claim of the man's affection who begot me. Addison.

UNLAWFULNESS, n. f.

1. Contrariety to law; state of being not permitted.

If those alleged testimonies of scripture did indeed concern the matter to such effect as was pretended, that which they should infer were unlawfulness. Hooker.

The original reason of the unlawfulness of lying is, that it carries with it an act of injustice, and a violation of the right of him to whom we were obliged to signify our minds. South.

2. Illegitimacy.

TO UNLARN, v. a. To forget, or disuse, what has been learned.

UNLEARNED. adj. Unlearned; untaught.

Unlocks the door, and, entering out of breath,
The dying saw, and instruments of death.

2. To open in general.

My party, my passion, my best friend means,
His all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakespeare.
I yielded, and unlock'd her all my heart.
Who, with a gain of manhood well resolv'd,
Might easily have shook off all her shares. Milton.
Sound is an advantage to cold clays, in that it warms them, and unlocks their binding qualities.
Mortimer.

A mixture of quick-lime unlocks the salts that are entangled in the viscid juices of some scorbutic persons. Arbuthnot.

Thy forests, Windfor! and thy green retreats Invite my lays. Be present, Sylvan maids!
Unlock your springs, and open all your shades. Pope.

UNLOCKED. adj. Not fastened with a lock.

UNLOOKED. adj. Unexpected; not UNLOOKED for. } foreseen.

Yet perhaps had their number prevailed, if the king of Pontus had not come unlooked for to their succour. Sidney.

How much unlook'd for is this expedition!
Shakespeare.

God, I pray him
That none of you may live your natural age,
But by some unlook'd accident cut off. Shakespeare.
Whatever is new is unlooked for; and ever it incurs blame, had pure others. Bacon.

From that high hope, to what relapse
Unlook'd for are we fall'n! Paradise Regained.
Your affairs I have recommended to the king,
but with unlooked success. Denham.

Nor same I slight, nor for her favours call;
She comes unlook'd for, if she comes at all. Pope.

To UNLOOK'D. v. a. To loose. A word perhaps barbarous and ungrammatical, the particle prefixed implying negation;
so that to unloose, is properly to bind.

York, unloose your long imprison'd thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart. Shakspeare.

The weak, wanton Cupid
Shall from your neck unloose his am'rous fold;
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air. Shakspeare.

Turn him to any cause of folly;
The gordian knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter. Shakspeare.

It rested in you,
To unloose this tied-up justice when you pleas'd.
Shakspeare.

The latchet of his shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose. Mark.

He that should spend all his time in tying inextricable knots only to baffle the industry of those that should attempt to unloose them, would be thought not much to have served his generation.
Decey of Piety.

To UNLOOSE. v. n. To fall in pieces; to lose all union and connection.

Without this virtue, the publick union must un-loose; the strength decay; and the pleasure grow faint. Collier.

UNLOOSEABLE. adj. [A word rarely used.]
Not to be lost.

Whatever may be said of the unlooseable mobility of atoms, yet divers parts of matter may compose bodies that need no other cement to unite them, than the just position and resting together of their parts, whereby the air, and other fluids that might dissipate them, are excluded. Boyle.

UNLOVED. adj. Not loved.

As love does not always reflect itself, Zelmene, though reason there was to love Pallidus, yet could not ever persuade her heart to yield with that pain to Palladius, as they feel, that feel unloved love. Sidney.

What though I be not fortunate;
But miserable none, to love unloved! Shakspeare.
He was generally unloved, as a proud and supercilious person. Clarendon.

UNLOVELINESS. n. s. Unamiableness;
inability to create love.

The old man, growing only in age and affection, followed his suit with all means of unloveliness, large promises, and each thing else that might help to counterail his own unloveliness. Sidney.

UNLOVELY. adj. That cannot excite love.
Therefore, by this word generally understood intended that barely negation. See UN-LOVELINESS.

UNLOVING. adj. Unkind; not fond.

Thou, blest with a goodly son,
Didst yield content to disinherit him;
Which argu'd thee a most unloving father. Shakspeare.

UNLUCKILY. adv. Unfortunately; by ill luck.

Things have fallen out so unluckily,
That we have had no time to move our daughter.
Shakspeare.

An ant dropt unluckily into the water. L'Estr.
A fox unluckily crossing the road, drew off a considerable detachment. Addison.

UNLUCKY. adj.
1. Unfortunate; producing unhappiness.

This word is generally used of accidents slightly vexatious.

You may make an experiment often, without meeting with any of those unlucky accidents which make such experiments misferry. Boyle.

2. Unhappy; miserable; subject to frequent misfortunes.

Then shall I you recount a rueful case,
Said he; the which with this unlucky eye
I late beheld. Spenser.

3. Slightly mischievous; mischievously wagging.

His friendship is counterfeit, seldom to trust;
His doings unluckie, and ever unjust. Tupper.

Why, cries an unlucky wag, a less bag might have served. L'Estrange.

There was a lad, th' unluckiest of his crew,
Was still contriving something bad, but new. King.

4. Ill-omened; inauspicious.

When I appear, see you avoid the place,
And baunt me not with that unlucky face. Druden.

UNLUSTRIOUS. adj. Wanting splendour; wanting lustre.

Should I join gripes with hands
Made hard with hourly fal blood, as with labour;
Then glad myself with peeping in an eye,
Hate and unlovely as the smoky light
That's fed with sinking tallow. Shakspeare.

To UNLUTE. v. a. To separate vessels closed with chymical cement.

Our antimony thus handled, affordeth us an ounce of sulphur, of so sulphureous a smell, that, upon the unluting the vessels, it infected the room with a scarce supportable stink. Boyle.

UNMADE. adj.
1. Not yet formed; not created.

Thou wast begot in Demogorgon's hall,
And saw'st the secrets of the world unmade. Spenser.

Then might'st thou tear thy hair,
And fall upon the ground as I do now,
Taking the measure of an unmade grave. Shakspeare.

2. Deprived of form or qualities.

The first earth was perfectly unmade again, taken all to pieces, and fram'd a-new. Woodward.

3. Omitted to be made.

You may the world of more defects upbraid,
That other works by nature are unmade;
That she did never at her own expence
A palace rear. Blackmore.

UNMAIMED. adj. Not deprived of any essential part.

An interpreter should give his author entire and unmaimed; the diction and the verification only are his proper province. Pope.

UNMAKABLE. adj. Not possible to be made.

If the principles or bodies are unalterable, they are also unmakeable by any but a divine power. Grew.

To UNMAKE. v. a. To deprive of former qualities before possessed; to deprive of form or being.

They've made themselves, and their trusts now
Does unmake you. Shakspeare.

God does not make, or unmake things, in any excessive manner.
Empire? often poor and despicable thing.
When such as these make, or unmake a king.

Being this guide of the light within to the trial;
God, when he makes the prophet, does not unmake
the man. Locke.

To UNMAN. v. a.

1. To deprive of the constituent qualities of a human being, as reason.

What quite unmann'd in folly? Shakspeare.
Gross errors unman, and strip them of the very principles of reason and sober discourse. South.

2. To emasculate.

3. To break into irresolution; to deject.

Her clamours pierce the Trojans' ears,
Unman their courage, and augment their fears. Dryden.

Ulysses vail'd his pensive head;
Again unmann'd, a shower of sorrows shed. Pope.

UNMANAGEABLE. adj.

1. Not manageable; not easily governed.

They'll judge every thing by models of their own,
and thus are rendered unmanageable by any authority but that of absolute dominion. Glanville.

None can be concluded unmanageable by the milder methods of government, till they have been thoroughly tried upon him; and if they will not prevail, we make no excuses for the obstinate. Locke.

2. Not easily wielded.

UNMANNAGED. adj.

1. Not broken by horsemanship.

Like colts, or unmanaged horses, we start at dead bones and lifeless blocks. Taylor.

2. Not tutored; not educated.

Savage princes flash out sometimes into an irregolar greatness of thought, and betray, in their actions, an unguided force, and unmanaged virtue. Fulton.

UNMANLIKE. adj.

1. Unbecoming a human being.

It is strange to see the unmanlike cruelty of mankind, who, not content with their tyrannous ambition, to have brought the others' virtuous patience under them, think their masterhood nothing, without doing injury to them. Sidney.

Where the act is unmanly, or the expectation contradictory to the attributes of God, our hopes we ought never to entertain. Collier.

2. Unsuitable to a man; effeminate.

By the greatness of the cry, it was the voice of man; though it was a very unmanlike voice, so to cry. Sidney.

New customs,
Though never so ridiculous,
Nay, let them be unmanly, yet are follow'd. Shakspeare.

This is in thee a nature but affected;
A poor unmanly melancholy, sprung
From change of fortune. Shakspeare.

My servitude, ignoble,
Unmanly, ignominious, infamous. Milton.

Unmanly dread invades the French astonish'd,
And freight their useless arms they quit. Philips.

Think not thy friend can ever feel the soft Unmanly warmth and tenderness of love. Addison.

UNMANNERED. adj. Rude; brutal; un-civil.

You have a slanderous, beastly, unwash'd tongue
In your rude mouth, and favouring yourself, Unmanner'd lord. Pan Jonson.

If your barking dog disturb her ease,
Th' unmanner'd rascal actor is arraign'd. Dryden.

UNMANNERLINESS. n. s. Breach of civility; ill behaviour.

A sort of unmannerliness is apt to grow up with young people, if not early restrained; and that a forwardness to interrupt others speaking. Locke.

UNMANNERLY. adj. Ill-bred; not civil not complaisant.

Sweetheart,
I were unmanly to take you out,
And not to kiss you. Shakspeare.

He will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmanly sadness in his youth. Shakespeare.
Unaffected boldness is both unmanly in itself, and fulsome to the reader. Dryden.
A divine dares hardly show his person among fine gentlemen; or, if he fall into such company, he is in continual apprehension that some great man of pleasure should break an unmannerly jest, and render him ridiculous. Swift.

UNMANNERLY. adv. Uncivily.
Forgive me, if I have us'd myself unmannerly. Shakespeare.
UNMANNERED. adj. Not cultivated.
The land, in antique times, was savage wilderness; unpeopled, unmanner'd, unprov'd, unprais'd. Spenser.

UNMARKED. adj. Not observed; not regarded.
I got a time, unmarked by any, to steal away, I cared not whither, so I might escape them. Sidney.
This place unmark'd, though oft I walk'd the green, in all my progress I had never seen. Dryden.
Entering at the gate, conceal'd in clouds, He mix'd, unmark'd, among the busy throng, Borne by the tide, and pass'd unseen along. Dryden.
Unmark'd, unhonour'd at a monarch's gate. Pope.

UNMARRIED. adj. Having no husband, or no wife.

Metaphors, metaphors, and metaphors.
UNMIXED. adj. Not mingled with dirt.
Puff, with safe, smiling foot,
Whose the rain's pavement leads allward the street.

UNMIXED. adj. Not softened.
With public accusation, uncovered slander, unmitigated rancour.
UNMIXED. adj. Not mingled with any UNMIXED. adj. thing; pure; not corrupted by additions.

Thy commandment all alone shall live
Within the book and volume of my brain,
Unmix'd with baser matter.
It exhibits a mixture of new conceits and old;
whereas the infaturation gives the new, unmixed otherwise than with some little aspersions of the old.

Thy constant quiet fills my peaceful breast
With unmix'd joy, uninterrupted rest.
What is glory but the blaze of fame,
The people's praise, if always praise unmix'd?

Thy Arethusan stream remains unfold'd;
Unmix'd with foreign silt, and undisturb'd.
Together out they fly,
Inseparable now, the truth and lie:
And this or that unmix'd no mortal ear shall find.

UNMIXED. adj. Not lamented.
Fatherless distress was left unmix'd;
Your widow dolours likewise be unwet.

UNMIXED. adj. Not wet.
Volatils Hermes, fluid and unmoist,
Mounts on the wings of air.

UNMIXED. adj. Not made wet.
The incident light that meets with a grosser liquor, will have its beams more or less interruptedly reflected, than they would be if the body had been unmixed.

UNMIXED. adj. Free from disturbance; free from external troubles.
Cleopatra was read o'er,
While Scot, and Wake, and twenty more,
That teach one to deny one's self,
Stood unmixed on the shelf.

The fowls of the air, and the beasts of the field, are supplied with every thing, unmixed by hopes or fears.

Safe on my shore each unmixed swim
Shall tread the floods, or reap the bearded grain.

TO UNMIXED. v. a.
1. To loose from land, by taking up the anchors.

We with the rising morn our ships unmix'd,
And brought our captives and our stores aboard.

2. Prior seems to have taken it for casting anchor.

Soon as the British ships unmix'd,
And jolly long boat rows to shore.

UNMIXED. adj. Unmatured by morality.

This transferred to the mask of a dissolute and unnatural temper.

UNMIXED. adj. Not mortgaged.
Is there one God unmix'd to my destruction?
The God unmortgag'd hope? for, if there be,
Mortgage I cannot fall.

This he has repeated so often, that at present there is scarce a single gabel unmortgaged.

UNMIXED. adj. Not subdued by fear, and feverance.

If our conscience reproach us with unmortgag'd sin, our hope is the hope of an hypocrite.

UNMIXED. adj. Such as cannot be removed or altered.
Wherein consists the precise and unmovable boundaries of that species.

UNMIXED. adj. Not put out of one place into another.

The light, oft under unmix'd shells do lie.
Ben Jonson, and winter's rage o' coldness
His hasty body, but unmix'd he grows.

Chess-men standing on the same squares of the chess-board, we say they are all in the same place, or unmix'd; though, perhaps, the chess-board hath been carried out of one room into another.

2. Not changed in resolution.
Among innumerable false, unmix'd, Unshaken, uneduc'd.

3. Not affected; not touched with any passion.

Cæsar, the world's great master and his own,
Unmix'd, superiour still in every state,
And scarce detested in his country's fate.

4. Unaltered by passion.
I meant to meet
My fate with face unmix'd, and eyes unwet.

UNMIXING. adj.
1. Having no motion.

The celestial bodies, without impulse, had continued unactive, unmoving heaps of matter.

2. Having no power to raise the passions; unaffected.

TO UNMIX'D. v. a. To change as to the form.

Its passing position
The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, unmoulding reason's mintage, Character'd in the face.

UNMIX'D. adj. Not lamented; not deplored.

O let me here sink down
Into my grave unmention'd and unmourn'd.

TO UNMIX'D. v. a. To put off a covering from the face.

Unmix'd, ye faint stars! and thou, fair moon,
That won't it to love the traveller's benison,
Scoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,
And disinherit chaos, that reigns here
In double night, of darkness and of shades.

UNMIX'D. adj. Not harmonious; not pleasing by sound.

Let argument bear no unmix'd sound,
Nor just interpose, sacred friendship to grieve.

One man's ambition wants satisfaction, another's avarice, a third's spleen; and this discord makes up the very unmix'd harmony of our murmurs.

TO UNMIX'D. v. a. To loose from a muzzle.

Now unmuzzle your wisdom.
Have you not let mine honour at the stake,
And baited it with all th' unmuzzled thoughts
Thy tyrannous heart can think?

UNMIX'D. adj. Not mentioned.
Author of evil, unknown till thy revolt,
Unmix'd in heav'n.

UNMIX'D. adj.
1. Contrary to the laws of nature; contrary to the common instincts.

Her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it.

People of weak bonds on the one hand, and vile affections on the other, have made an unnatural divorce between being wife and good.

2. Acting without the affections implanted by nature.

Rome, whose gratitude
Tow'ards her delivering children is unmix'd
In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam,
Should now eat up her own.

What tyrant were,
To a son to be so unnatural,
What will he be to us?

3. Forced; not agreeable to the real state of persons or things; not representing nature.

They admire only glittering trifles, that in a serious poem are needless, because they are unnatural.
Would any man, who is ready to die for love, describe his passion like Narcissus?

In an heroic poem, two kinds of thoughts are carefully to be avoided; the first, are such as are affected and unnatural; the second, such as are mean and vulgar.

UNNATURALLY. adv. In opposition to nature.

All the world have been frighted with an ap-position of their own fancy, or they have appear'd unnaturally complicit to cozen themselves.

UNNATURALNESS. n. s. Contrariety to nature.

The God which is the God of nature doth never teach unnaturalness.

UNNAVIGABLE. adj. Not to be pass'd by vessels; not to be navigated.

Pindar's unnavigable song
Like a swift stream from mountains pours along.

Some who the depths of eloquence have found,
In that unnavigable stream were drown'd.

Let wit her sails, her oars let wit land,
The helm let politick experience guide:
Yet cease to hope thy short-liv'd bark shall ride
Down spreading fate's unnavigable tide.

UNNECESSARILY. adv. Without necessity; without need; needlessly.

To abrogate, without constraint of manifest harm thereby arising, had been to alter unnecessarily, in their judgment, the ancient received custom of the whole church.

'Tis highly imprudent, in the greatest of men, unnecessarily to provoke the monster.

These words come in without any connexion with the story, and consequently unnecessarily.

UNNECESSARINESS. n. s. Needlessness.

These are such excuses as afford no middle for industry to exit, hope being equally out-dated by the desperation of our unnecessaryness of an undertaking.

UNNECESSARY. adj. Needless; not wanted; useless.

The doing of things unnecessary, is many times
the cause why the most necessary are not done.

Thou whore thou art; thou unnecessary letter.

Let brave spirits, fitted for command by fit or land, not be laid by as persons unnecessary for the time.

Lay that unnecessary fear aside;
Mine be the care new people to provide.

Unnecessary coinage, as well as unnecessary revival of words, runs into affectation; a fault to be avoided on either hand.

They did not only shun persecution, but affirmed that it was unnecessary for their followers to bear their religion through such fiery trials.

UNNEIGHBOURLY. adj. Not kind; not suitable to the duties of a neighbour.

Parnassus is but a barren mountain, and its inhabitants make it more so by their unneighbourly deportment.

UNNEIGHBOURLY. adv. In a manner not suitable to a neighbour; with malevolence; with mutual mischief.

These two christian armies might combine
The blood of malice in a vein of league,
And not to spend it so unneighbourly.

And when he smote and fell of eloquence, that they wept, and wept, his verie. Addison.

UNWEAKED. adj. Weak; feeble.

Pyrrhus at Priam drives, in rage strikes wide;
But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword
The unweaken'd father falls. Shakespeare.

UNWEATH. adv. [This is from us and UNWEATHES. adv. Saxon, easy; and ought therefore to be written unweath.]
Scarcely; hardly; not without difficulty.
Obsolete.

Diagon, I am so stiff and stank,
That unweath I may stand any more;
And how the western wind bloweth fore,
Beating the wither'd leaf from the tree. Spenser.
A shepherd's boy,

When winter's wasteful spight was almost spent,
Led forth his flocks, that had been long ypent;
So faint they were, and feeble in the fold,
That now unweathes their feet could 'em uphold.

UNWOMBLE. adj. Mean; ignominious; ignoble.

I have offend'd reputation;
A most unwomble (werving). Shakespeare.

UNNOTED. adj.

1. Not observed; not regarded; not heeded.

They may jest,
Till their own scorn return to them unnoted. Shakespeare.

He drew his seat familiar to her side,
Far from the fuitor train, a brutal crowd;
Where the free guest unnoted might relate,
If haply conscious of his father's fate. Pope.

2. Not honoured.

A shameful fate now hides my hopeless head,
Unwept, unnoted, and for ever dead. Pope.

UNNUMBERED. adj. Innumerable.

The skies are painted with unnumber'd sparks;
They are all fire, and every one duth shine: Shaksp.
Our bodies are but the anvils of pain and diseases, and our minds the hives of unnumbered cares and passions. Raleigh.

Of various forms, unnumber'd spectres, more Centaur, and double shapes, besiege the door. Dryden.

Pitchy and dark the night sometimes appears;
Our joy and wonder sometimes she excites,
With stars unnumber'd. Prior.

UNOBEYED. adj. Not obeyed.

Not leave
Unworshipp'd, unobeyed, the throne supreme. Milt.

UNOBJECTED. adj. Not charged as a fault, or contrary argument.

What will he leave unobjected to Luther, when he makes it his crime that he defied the devil? Atterbury.

UNOBNOXIOUS. adj. Not liable; not exposed to any hurt.

So unobnoxious now, she hath buried both;
For none to death sin, that to sin is loth. Donne.

In fight they flood Unwearied, unobnoxious to be pain'd. Milton.

UNOBSEQUIOUSNESS. n. s. Incompliance; disobedience.

They make one man's particular failings, confessing laws to others; and convey them as such to their successors, who are bold to misname all unobsequiousness to their iniquity, presumption. Brown.

UNOBSERVABLE. adj. Not to be observed;
not discoverable.

A piece of glass reduced to powder, the same which, when entire, freely transmitted the beams of light, acquiring by confusion a multitude of minute surfaces, reflects, in a confused manner, little and singly unobservable images of the lucid body, that from a diaphanous is degenerated into a white body. Boyle.

UNOBSERVANT. adj.

1. Not obsequious.

2. Not attentive.

The unobservant multitude may have some general, concluded apprehensions of a deity, that guide the conduct of the universe. Steele.

UNOBSERVED. adj. Not regarded; not attended to; not heeded; not minded.

The motion in the minute parts of any solid body, which is the principal cause of violent motion, though unobserved, passeth without found. Hacon.

They the Son of God, our Saviour mock,
Sang victor; and from heavenly feast refresh'd, Brought on his way with joy; he, unobserv'd,
Home to his mother's house private return'd. Milton.

Every unwanted meteor is portentous, and the appearance of any unobserved star, some divine prognostick. Glentville.

Such was the Boyne, a poor, inglorious stream,
That in Hibernian vales obscurely stray'd,
And, unobserv'd, in wild wanders play'd. Addy.
Had I erred in this case, it had been a well-meant mistake, and might have pass'd unobserved. Atterbury.

UNOBSERVING. adj. Inattentive; not heedful.

His similitudes are not placed, as our unobserving criticks tell us, in the heat of any action; but commonly in its declining. Dryden.

UNOBSERVED. adj. Not hindered;
not stopped.

Unobserved matter flies away,
Ranges the void, and knows not where to stay. Blackmore.

UNOBSSTRUCTIVE. adj. Not raising any obstacle.

Why should he halt at either station? why
Not forward run in unobsstructive sky? Blackmore.

UNOBTAINED. adj. Not gained; not acquired.

As the will doth now work upon that object by desire, which is motion towards the end, as yet unobtained: so likewise, upon the same hereafter received, it shall work also by love. Hooker.

UNOBVIOUS. adj. Not readily occurring.
Of all the metals, not any so constantly discoloured its unobvious colour, as copper. Boyle.

UNOCCUPIED. adj. Unpossessed.
If we shall discover further to the north pole, we shall find all that tract not to be vain, useless, or unoccupied. Ray.

Thy fancy hath power to create them in the sen-sories, then unoccupied by external impressions. Grew.

UNOFFENDING. adj.

1. Harmless; innocent.

Thy unoffending life I could not save;
Nor weeping could I follow to thy grave. Dryden.

2. Sinless; pure from fault.

It those holy and unoffending spirits, the angels, veil their faces before the throne of his majesty;
with what awe should we, sinful dust and ashes, approach that infinite power we have so grievously offended! Rogers.

UNOFFERED. adj. Not proposed to acceptance.

For the sad business of Ireland, he could not express a greater sense, there being nothing left on his part unoffered or undone. Clarendon.

TO UNOIL. v. a. To free from oil.
A tight maid, ere he for wine can ask,
Guesses his meaning, and un oils the flask. Dryden.

UNOPENING. adj. Not opening.
Beuighted wanderers, the forest o'er,
Curse the fav'd candle, and unopening door. Pope.

UNOPERATIVE. adj. Producing no effects.

The wishing of a thing is not properly the willing of it, but an imperfect velocity; and imports no more than an idle, unoperative complacency in the end, with a direct abhorrence of the means. Smith.

UNOPPOSED. adj. Not encountered by any hostility or obstruction.

Proud, art thou met? thy hope was to have
reach'd
The height of thy aspiring, unoppos'd,
The throne of God unguarded. Milton.

To every subtle portion of the air
The curling billows roll, and every line
Is parted now they struggle up and down
As armies, marching, for prey divide. Dryden.
The people has a leading current on,
And every dam they break or overflow.
But unoppos'd they either lose their force,
Or wind in volumes to their former course. Dryden.

UNORDERLY. adj. Disordered; irregular.

Since some ceremonies must be used, every man would have his own fashion; whereas what other would be the issue, but infinite distraction and unorderly confusion in the church? Smucker.

UNORDINARY. adj. Uncommon; unusual. Not used.

I do not know how they can be excused from murder, who kill monstrous births, because of an unordinary shape, without knowing whether they have a rational soul or no. Locke.

UNORGANIZED. adj. Having no parts instrumental to the motion or nourishment of the rest.

It is impossible for any organ to regulate itself:
much less may we refer this regulation to the animal spirits, an unorganized fluid. Grew.

UNORIGINAL. adj. Having no birth;
UNORIGINATED. adj. ungenerated.

I toil'd out my uncouth passages, forc'd to ride
Th' untractable abyss, plung'd in the womb
Of unoriginal night, and chaos wild. Milton.

In scripture, Jehovah signifies, that God is un-derived, unoriginated, and self-existent. Stephens.

UNORTHODOX. adj. Not holding pure doctrine.

A fat benefice became a crime against its incumbent; and he was sure to be unorthodox that was worth the plandering. Deacy of Pity.

UNOWNED. adj. Having no owner.

England now is left
To tug and scramble, and to part by th' tooth
The unowned interest of proud, swelling state. Shakespeare.

UNOWNED. adj.

1. Having no owner.

2. Not acknowledged; not claimed.

Of night or loneliness it recks me not;
I fear the dread events that dog them both,
Left some ill-greeting touch attempt the person
Of our unowned sister. Milton.

O happy, unown'd youths! your limbs can bear
The scorching dog star, and the winter's air;
While the rich infant, nurs'd with care and pain,
Thrills with each heat, and coughs with ev'ry rain. Gay.

TO UNPACK. v. a.

1. To disburden; to exonerate.

I, the son of a dur father warner'd,
Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words. Shakespeare.

2. To open any thing bound together.

He had a great parcel of glasses packed up, which when he had unpacked, a great many cracked at themselves. Boyle.

UNPACKED. adj. Not collected by unlawful artifices.

The knight
Resolv'd to leave him to the fury
Of justice, and an unpack'd jury. Hudibras.

UNPAID. adj.

1. Not discharged.

Receive from us knee tribute not unpaid. Milton.

Nor hecatomb unlain, nor vows unpaid,
On Greeks, accus'd, this dire confusion bring. Dryden.

What can atone, oh ever-injur'd shade!
Thy fate unpay'd, and thy rites unpaid? Pope.

2. Not receiving dues or debts.
How often are relations neglected, and tradesmen unpaid, for the support of the vanity! Collier.

Th' embezzler'd tale, at last, he thence'd his pry;
That suit, an unpaid tailor fetch'd away. Pope.

3. UNPAID for. That for which the price is not yet given; taken on trust.

Richer, than doing nothing for a pauper;
Prouder, than nothing in unpaid for bill. Shaksp.

UNPAINED adj. Suffering no pain.
Too unequal work we find,
Against unequal arms to fight in pain;
Against unpaired, in pain. Milton.

UNPAINFUL adj. Giving no pain.
That is generally called 'ard, which will put us to pain, sooner than change nature; and that soft, which changes the situation of its parts, upon an easy and un painful touch. Locke.

UNPALATABLE adj. Nauseous; disgusting.
The man who laugh'd but once to see an ass
Mumbling to make the cross grain'd thistles pass,
Might laugh again to see a jery chaw
The prickles of unpalatable law. Dryden.

A good man will be no more disturbed at the methods of correction, than by firing his friend take unpalatable physic. Collier.

UNPARAGONED adj. Unequalled; unmatched.
Either your unparagon'd mistress is dead, or she's out-pariz'd by a trifle. Shakspere.

UNPARALLELED adj. Not matched; not to be matched; having no equal.
I have been

main as wood, and were never yet converted. Brown.

UNPHILOSOPHICAL adj. Unfuitable to the rules of philosophy, or right reason.

Your conceptions are unphilosophical. You forget that the brain has a great many small fibres in its texture; which, according to the different strokes they receive from the animal spirits, awaken a correspondent idea. Collier.
It became him who created them to set them in order: and if he did so, it is unphilosophical to look for any other origin of the world, or to pretend that it might arise out of chaos by the mere laws of nature.

UNPHILOSOPHICALLY, adv. In a manner contrary to the rules of right reason. They forget that he is the first cause of all things, and discourse most unphilosophically, absurdly, and unsuitably to the nature of an infinite being; whose influence must let the first wheel a-going. South.

UNPROVED, adj.
1. Not tried; not known by trial.

In antique times was savage wilderness,
Unpeopled, unmanur'd, unprov'd, unprov'd.

There I found a fresh unprov'd knight,
Whose manly hands imbrued in guilty blood
Had never been.

2. Not evinced by argument.
There is much of what should be demonstrated,
left unprov'd by those chymical experiments

To UNPROVIDE, v. a. To divest of resolution or qualifications; to unfurnish.

I'll not expostulate with her, lest
Her beauty unprovide my mind again.

Prosperity, inviting every sense
With various arts to unprovide my mind;
What but a Spartan spirit can sustain
The shocks of such temptations?

UNPROVIDED, adj.
1. Not secured or qualified by previous measures.

Where shall I find one that can steal well? O, for a fine thief of two and twenty, or thereabout; I am heavily unprovided.

With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body, lanc'd my arm.
Tears, for a stroke foretold, afford relief;
But unprovided for a sudden blow;
Like Niobe we marble grow,
And petrify with grief.

2. Not furnished; not previously supplied.
Those unprovided of tackling and vidual are forced to sea.

The seditious had neither weapons, order, nor counsel; but, being in all things unprovided, were soon like beasts.

The ambitious compass with her son in joy'd,
And, in his brother's absence, has design'd
The unprovided towns to take.

True zeal is not a solitary, melancholy grace, as it only fit to dwell in mean minds; such as are nearly unprovided of all other natural, moral, or spiritual abilities.

Courts are seldom unprovided of persons under this character, on whom most employments naturally fall.

UNPROVOKED, adj. Not provoked.

The tearing earth, yet guilts of the plough,
And unprovok'd, the blood of the slain.

Let them, far from all eyes, and from all ears, encourage a rebellion to dissimulation and to unprovoked.

UNPROVING, adj. Giving no offence.
I stabbed him a strange, unproving, unproving, five.

UNPRUNED, adj. Not cut; not lopped.
The whole land is full of weeds;
Her fruit-trees all unprun'd.

UNPUBLICK, adj. Private; not generally known, or seen.

Virgins must be retired and unpublick: for all freedom of society is a violence done to virginity, not in its natural, but in its moral capacity: that is,
it loses part of its severity and strictness, by publishing that person, whose work is religion, whose thoughts must dwell in heaven.

UNPUBLISHED, adj.
1. Secret; unknown.

All best secrets;
All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears.

2. Not given to the publick.
Apply your care wholly to those which are unpublished.

UNPUNISHED, adj. [impunis, Fr.] Not punished; suffered to continue in impunity.

shalt not be unpunished.

Divine justice will not let oppression go unpunish'd, L'Estrange.

The vent'rous victor march'd unpunish'd hence,
And seem'd to boast his fortunate offence.

UNPURCHASED, adj. Unbought.
Unpurchas'd plenty our full tables loads,
And part of what they lent, return t' our gods.

UNPURGED, adj. Not purged; unpurified.

Is Brutus sick?
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To tempt the rheumy and unpurged air,
To add unto his sickness?

In her visage round those spots, unpurged,
Vapours not yet into her substance turn'd.

UNPURIFIED, adj.
1. Not freed from recrement.

2. Not cleaned from sin.
Our sinful nation having been long in the furnace, is now come out, but unpurified.

UNPURPOSED, adj. Not designed; not intentional.

Do it,
Or thy precedent services are all
But accidents unpurpos'd.

UNPURSUED, adj. Not pursued.
All night the dreadful angel unpurs'd
Through heav'n's wide champaign held his way.

UNPUTRIED, adj. Not corrupted by rottenness.

Meat and drink last longer unputrified, or unsour'd, in winter than in summer.

No animal unputrified, being burnt, yields any alkaline salt, but, putrified, yields a volatile alkali.

UNQUALIFIED, adj. Not fit.
Till he has denuded himself of all these incumbrances, he is utterly unqualified for these agonies.

All the writers against christianity, since the revolution, have been of the lowest rank in regard to literature, wit, and sense; and upon that account wholly unqualified to propagate heretics; unless among a people already abandoned.

Tories are more hated by the zealous whigs, than the very papists, and as much unqualified for the smallest offices.

To UNQUALIFY, v. a. To disqualify;
to divest of qualification.

Arbitrary power is diminish'd the base of the female figure, into unqualify a woman for an evening walk.

Our private misfortune may unqualify us for charity; but reflect, whether they may not have been unqualify'd by God, as just punishment of our former uncharitableness.

Death's unqualify me for all company. Swift UNQUALIFIABLY, adj. Such as cannot be impugned.

There arise unto the examination such satisfactory and unqualifiable reasons, as may confute the charges generally received.

To UNQUEEN, v. a. To divest of the dignity of queen.

Embalm me,
Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me!

UNQUEENCHABLE, adj. Unextinguishable.

We represent wildfires burning in water and unquenchable.

The people on their holidays,
Impetuous, insolent, unquenchable.

The criminal's penitence may have numbered him among the saints, when our unretreated un-charitableness may send us to unquenchable flames.

Government of the Tongue.
Our love of God, our unquenchable desires to promote our well-grounded hopes to enjoy his glory, should take the chief place in our zeal.

UNQUEENLIKENESS, n. f. Unextinguishableness.

I was amazed to see the unquenchableness of this fire.

UNQUENCHED, adj.
1. Not extinguished.

We have heats of dung, and of lime unquench'd.

2. Not extinguishable.
Sadness, or great joy, equally dissipates the spirits, and immoderate exercise in hot air, with unquench'd thirst.

UNQUESTIONABLE, adj.
1. Indubitable; not to be doubted.

The duke's carriage was surely noble throughout; of unquestionable courage in himself, and rather fearful of samethan danger.

One reason that mathematical demonstrations are uncontroverted, is because interest hath no place in those unquestionable verities.

There is an unquestionable magnificence in every part of Paradise lost.

2. Such as cannot bear to be questioned without impudence: this seems to be the meaning here.

What were his marks? —
A lean cheek, which you have not; an unquestionable spirit, which you have not.

UNQUESTIONABLY, adv. Indubitably; without doubt.

If the fathers were unquestionably of the household of faith, and all to do good to them; then certainly their children cannot be strangers in this household.

St. Austin was unquestionably a man of parts, but, interposing in a controversy where his talent did not lie, shew'd his zeal against the antipodes to very ill purpose.

UNQUESTIONED, adj.
1. Not doubted; pass'd without doubt.

Other relations in good authors, though we do not positively deny, yet have they not been unquestioned by some.

2. Indisputable; not to be opposed.
It did not please the gods, who instruct the people;

And their unquestion'd pleasures must be stor'd.

3. Not interrogated; not examined.
She muttering pray'r was holy rites she meant,
Through the divided crowd unquestion'd went.

UNQUIET, adj. Motionless; not alive.
His senses droop, his steady eyes unquiet;
And much he sighs, and yet he is not sick.

UNQUIETENED, adj. Not animated;
not roused to vitality.

Heavy fate bears a secret board,
With sleeping unquieten'd idler stor'd;

Which mutinous, but unquieten'd progeny,
Clasp'd, and enwrap'd within each other lie.

Blackmore.

UNQUIET. adj. [inquiet, French; inquietus, Latin.]

1. Moved with perpetual agitation; not calm; not still.

From grammatical flats and shallows, they are on the sudden transported to be tossed and tumoiled with their unballasted way, in tumultuous and unquiet depths of controversy. Milton.

2. Disturbed; full of perturbation; not at peace.

Go with me to church, and call me wife,
And then away to Venice to your friend;
For never shall you be by Portia's side
With an unquiet soul. Shakespeare.

Thy love hopeful to regain,
From thee I will not hide
What thoughts in my unquiet breast are ris'n.

Milton.

3. Restless; unsatisfied.

She glazes in balls, front boxes, and the ring;
A spin, unquiet, glittering, wretched thing. Pope.
Mirth from company is but a fluttering, unquiet motion, that beats about the breast for a few moments, and after leaves it empty. Pope.

UNQUIETLY. adv. Without rest.

Who's there besides foul weather? — —One minded like the weather, most Unquietly. Shakespeare.

UNQUIETNESS. n. s.

intrigues of state. Arbutnot.

2. To disorder; to throw out of the present order.

How can any thing succeed well with people that are to be pleas'd with nothing, unless the ball of the universe may be unravell'd, and the laws of Providence overruled? L'Estrange.

O the traitor's name!

I'll know it; I will; art shall be conjur'd for it.
And nature all unravell'd. Dryden and Lee.

So prophage and sceptical an age takes a pride in unravelling all the received principles of reason and religion. Tillotson.

3. To clear up the intrigue of a play.

The solution of an unravelling of the intrigue commence'd, when the reader begins to see the doubts cleared up. Pope.

ness.

'Tis im-preparation and unreadiness when they find in us, then turn it to the soothing up of themselves in that accented fancy. Hooker.

2. Want of preparation.

Nothing is so great an enemy to tranquillity, and a contented spirit, as the amazement and confusion of unreadiness and inconsideration. Taylor.

UNRE'ADY. adj.

1. Not prepared; not fit.
The wary knight
Departed thence, altho his wounds wide,
Not thoroughly heal'd, unready were to ride. Spenser.

How now, my lords? what all unready so? Shakespeare.

2. Not prompt; not quick.

From a temperate inactivity, we are unready to put in execution the suggestions of reason; or by a content in every species of truth, we embrace the shadow thereof. Brown.

3. Awkward; ungain.

Young men, in the conduct of actions, use extreme remedies at first, and, that which doubtless all errors, will not acknowledge or retract them; like an unready horse, that will neither stop nor turn. Bacon.

UNRE'AL. adj. Unsubstantial; having only appearance.

Hence, terrible shadow!
Unreal mock'ry, hence! Shakespeare.

I with pain
Voyag'd th' unreal, vast unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton.

UNRE'ASONABLE. adj.

1. Not agreeable to reason.
No reason known to us; but that there is no reason thereof, I judge most unreasonable to imagine. Hooker.

It is unreasonable for men to be judges in their own cases; self-love will make men partial to themselves and their friends. Locke.

She entertained many unreasonable prejudices against him, before she was acquainted with his personal worth. Addison.

2. Exorbitant; claiming or insisting on more than is fit.

'Since every language is so full of its own properties, that what is beautiful in one, is often barbarous in another, it would be unreasonable to limit a translator to the narrow compass of his author's words. Druid.

My intention in publishing your names is not to desecrate your protection of the following papers, which are to be a very unreasonable request; and, by being inscribed to you, you cannot recommend them without some suspicion of partiality. Swift.

3. Greater than is fit; immoderate.
Those that place their hope in another world have, in a great measure, conquered dread of death, and unreasonable love of life. Atterbury.

UNRE'ASONABLENESS. n. s.

1. Inconsistency with reason.
The unreasonableness and presumption of those that thus project, have not so much as a thought, all their lives long, to advance so far as intuition. Hammond.

2. Exorbitance; excessive demand.
The unreasonableness of their propositions is not more evident, than that they are not the joint desires of the major number. King Charles.

A young university disputant was once, among of the unreasonableness of a lady, with whom he was engaged in a point of controversy. Addison.

UNRE'ASONABLY. adv.

1. Unlimitedness; frankness; largeness.

The tenderness and unreservedness of his love made him think those his friends, or enemies, that were so to God. Boyle.

2. Openness; frankness.

I write with more unreservedness than ever man wrote. Pope.

UNRESISTED. adj.

1. Not opposed.

The ætherial spaces are perfectly fluid; they neither assist nor retard the planets, which roll through as free and unresisted as if they moved in a vacuum. Bentley.

2. Resistless; such as cannot be opposed.

Those gods! whose unresisted might

Has sent me to those regions void of light. Dryd.

What wonder then, thy hairs should feel

The conquering force of unresisted steel? Pope.

UNRESISTING. adj. Not opposing; not making resistance.

The sheep was unresisted on no pretence,

But meek and unresisting innocence: Dryden.

A patient useful creature.

Since the planets move horizontally through the liquid and unresisting spaces of the heavens, where no bodies at all, or inconsiderable ones, occur,

they may preserve the same velocity which the first impulse impressed. Bentley.

UNRESOLVABLE. adj. Not to be solved;

insoluble.

For a man to run headlong, while his ruin stares him in the face; still to press on to the embraces of sin, is a problem unresolvable upon any other ground, but that sin insinuates before it destroys. South.

UNRESOLVED. adj.

1. Not determined; having made no resolution: sometimes with of.

On the western coast

Rideth a puissant navy: to our shores

Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends,

Unarm'd, and unresolved to beat them back. Shakespeare.

Turns, unresolved of flight,

Merestardy back, and just recedes from fight. Dry.

2. Not solved; not cleared.

I do not so magnify this method, to think it will perfectly clear every hard place, and leave no doubt unresolved. Locke.

UNRESOLVING. adj. Not resolving; not determined.

She, her arms about her unresolving husband

Stood. Dryden.

UNRESPECTIVE. adj. Inattentive; taking little notice.

I will converse with iron-witted fools,

And unrespective boys; none are for me

That look into me with considerate eyes. Shaksp.

UNREST. n. f. Disquiet; want of tranquility; uneasiness. Not in use.

Wife babble, those creeping flames by reason to subdue, Spenser.

Rejoice their rage grew to so great unrest.

Repose, sweet gold, for their unrest,

They have their sleep out of the empire's chest. Shakespeare.

History's confusion all posses'd

To affrighted troops, bearing their plot destroy'd:

Then came some's distress, with sad unrest.

To this, to that; to fly, to stand, to hide. Daniel.

Silence, in truth, would speak my sorrow best;

My dumbest wounds can teach their feelings tell;

Yet let me borrow from mine own unrest

That time to bid him, whom I lov'd, farewell. Waller.

Up they rose,
as from sleep, and each the other viewing,
Soon found their eyes how open'd, and their minds
How darken'd! Milton.

UNRESTORED. adj.

1. Not restored.

2. Not cleared from an attainder.

The soul of an unrestored traitor has no pretences to the quality of his ancestors. Collier.

UNRESTRAINED. adj.

1. Not confined; not hindered.

My tender age in luxury was train'd,

With idle ease and pageants entertain'd;

My hours my own, my pleasures unrestrain'd. Dryden.

2. Licentious; loose.

Two taverns he daily doth frequent,

With unrestrained loose companions. Shakespeare.

3. Not limited.

Were there in this aphorism an unrestrained

truth, yet were it not reasonable to infer from a caution a non-usage, or abolition. Brown.

UNRETRACTED. adj. Not revoked; not recalled.

The penitence of the criminal may have numbered him amongst the faints, when our unretracted

unchristianities may send us to unquenchable

flames. Government of the Tongue.

Nothing but plain malice can justify dis-union; malevolence shewn in a single outward act, unretracted, or in habitual ill-nature. Collier.

UNREVEALED. adj. Not told; not discovered.

Had ye once seen these her celestial treasures,

And unrevealed pleasures, Spenser.

Then would ye wonder, and her praises sing.

Dear, fatal name! rest ever unrevealed;

Nor pass these lips, in holy silence seal'd. Pope.

UNREVENGED. adj. Not revenged.

So might we die, not envying them that live;

So would we die, not unrevenge'd all. Fairfax.

Unhonour'd though I am,

Not unrevenge'd that impious act shall be. Dryden.

Great Pompey's shade complains that we are slow,

And Scipio's ghost walks unrevenge'd amongst us. Addison.

UNREVEREND. adj. Irreverent; disrespectful.

See not your bride in these unreverend topos. Shakespeare.

First unreverend tongue! to call her bad,

Whose sovereignty to oft thou hast prierr'd,

With twenty thousand foul-confirming oaths. Shakespeare.

UNREVERENTLY. adv. Disrespectfully.

I did unreverently blame the gods,

Who wake for thee, though thou insure for thyself. Ben Jonson.

UNREVERSED. adj. Not revoked; not repealed.

She hath offer'd to the doom,

Which unreversed stands in effectual force,

A sea of melting tears. Shakespeare.

UNREVO'KED. adj. Not recalled.

Hear my decree, which unrevok'd shall stand. Milton.

UNREWARD'D. adj. Not rewarded; not compensated.

Providence takes care that good offices may not pass unrewarded. L'Estrange.

Since for the common good I yield the fair,

My private loss let grateful Greece repair;

Nor unrewarded let your prince complain,

That he slow has sought, and bled in vain. Pope.

TO UNRA'DDL'E. v. a. To solve an enigma;

to explain a problem.

Some kind power unriddle where it lies,

Whether my heart be faulty, or her eyes! Shaksp.

The Platonic principles will not unriddle the doubt. Glennville.

A reverse often shows up the passage of an old poet, as the poet often shows up the unriddle the reverse. Addison.

UNRIGHTEOUS. adj. Not righteous.

If an indifferent and equidistant object could draw this balance, and a scale, he surely could with propriety rank proper motives thereof. Brown.

TO UNRI'G. v. a. To strip of the tackle.

Rhodes is the sovereign of the sea no more;

Their ships unrigg'd, and spent their naval force. Dryden.

UNRIGH'T. adj. Wrong. In Spenser, this word should perhaps be unright.

What in most English writers used to be loofa,

and as it were unright, in this author is well grounded, timely framed, and strongly trusted up together. Gliffery to Kalendar.

Show that thy judgment is not unright. Wisd.

UNRIGHTEOUS. adj. Unjust; wicked;

sinful; bad.

Otharius here leapt into his room,

And it usurped by unrighteous doom;

But he his title justify'd by might. Spenser.

Within a month!

Ere yet the fall of most unrighteous tears

Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,

She married—Oh most wicked speed! Shaksp.

Let the wicked man forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord. Ysaiah.

UNRIGHTEOUSLY. adv. Unjustly; wickedly; sinfully.

For them

Their foes a deadly Shibboleth devise:

By which unrighteously it was decreed,

That none to trust or profit should succeed,

Who would not swallow first a poisonous wicked weed. Dryden.

A man may fall unrighteously under public disgrace, or is unrighteously oppressed. Collier.

UNRIGHTEOUSNESS. n. f. Wickedness; injustice.

Our Romanists can no more abide this proposition converted, than themselves. All sin, say they, is a transgression of the law; but every transgression of the law is not sin. The apostle, therefore, turns it for us: all unrighteousness, says he, is sin; but every transgression of the law is unrighteousness, saith Austin upon this place. Hall.

Some things have a natural deformity in them,

as perjury, perfidiousness, unrighteousness, and ingratitude. Tilghson.

UNRIGH'TFUL. adj. Not rightful; not just.

Then, which know'st the way

To plant unrightful kings, with know again

To pluck him headlong from th' usurped throne. Shakespeare.

TO UNRI'G. v. a. To deprive of a ring.

Be forc'd to impeach a broken hedge,

And pigs unrigg'd at vit. franc. pledge. Hudibras.

TO UNRI'P. v. a. [This word is improper; there being no difference between rip and unrip; and the negative particle is therefore of no force; yet it is well authorised.] To cut open.

Like a traitor

Didst break that vow, and, with thy treacherous blade, Shaksp.

Unrip'd the bowels of thy foreign's son.

He could not now, with his honour, to unrip, and put a lye upon all that he had said and done before, as to deliver him up. Bacon.

We are angry with searhens when they break open trunks, and unrip packs, and open sealed letters. Taylor.

Cato well observes, that friendship ought not to be unripp'd, but unbitched. Collier.

UNRI'P'D. adj.

1. Immature; not fully connected.

Purpose is of violent birth, but poor validity;

Which now, like fruit unripe, sticks on the tree,

Not full when they are ready to be. Shaksp.

In this northern land, one hundred thousand other unripe and unripened souls. Waller.

2. Not consummated; not yet proper.

His son's his words unripe as dates,

Daughter not the garden's first-born fruit. Dryden.

3. Too early.

Who hath not heard of the valiant, wife, and Jail Dorians, whose virgins death doth yet, so many years since, descend from virtuous eyes? Sidney.

UNRIPENED. adj. Not matured.

Were you with these, you'd soon forget
The pale, unripen'd beauties of the north. Addison.
UNRIPENESS. n. f. Immaturity; want of ripeness.

The ripeness or unripeness of the occasion must ever be well weighed; and generally it is good to consult the beginnings of all great actions to Ari-stus, with his hundred eyes; and the ends to Aristatus, with his hundred hands. Bacon.

UNRIVALLED. adj.

1. Having no competitor.

Honour forbid! at whose unrival'd shrine
Ease, pleasure, virtue, all our sex resign. Pope.

2. Having no peer or equal.

To UNROL. v. a. To open what is rolled or convolved.

O horror!

The queen of nations, from her ancient seat,
Is foon for ever in the dark abyss;
Time has unroll'd her glories to the last,
And now clos'd up the volume. Dryden.

UNROMANTICK. adj. Contrary to romance.

It is a base unromantick spirit not to wait on you.
Swift.

To UNROOF. v. a. To strip off the roof or covering of houses.

The rabble should have first unroof'd the city,
Ere to prevail'd with me. Shakespeare.

UNROOSTED. adj. Driven from the roof.

Thou dostard! thou art woman-ir'd, unroosted,
By thy old dame Parlet-here. Shakespeare.

To UNROOT. v. a. To tear from the roots; to extirpate; to eradicate.

Since you've made the days and nights as one,
To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold; you do so grow in my requital,
That nothing can unroot you. Shakespeare.
Unroot the forest oaks, and bear away
Flocks, foids, and trees, an unrooting's prey. Dryden.

UNROUGH. adj. Smooth.

And many unrough youths, that even now
Protect their first of manhood. Shakespeare.

UNROUNDED. adj. Not shaped; not cut to a round.

Those unil'd pistolets,
That more than cannon-shot avails or lets;
Which, negligently left unrounded, look Like many-angled figures in the back
Of some dread conjurer. Donne.

UNROYAL. adj. Unprincely; not royal.

By the advice of his anxious councillors, he sent them with unroyal reproaches to Mafdoms and Pyrotes, as if they had done traitorously. Sidney.

To UNRUFILE. v. n. To cease from commotion, or agitation.

Where'er he guides his finny couriers,
The waves unruffle, and the sea subsides. Dryden.
UNRUFFLED. adj. Calm; tranquil; not tumultuous.

Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its back,
Calm and unruffled as a summer's sea,
When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface. Addison.

UNRULED. adj. Not directed by any superior power.

The realm was left like a ship in a storm, unruled all the raging passions, unruled and undirected of any;
for they to whom she was committed, faintest in their labour, or fastest their change. Spenser.

UNRULINESS. n. f. (from unruly.) Turbulence; tumultuousness; licentiousness.

By the negligence of those who were hardly to be commanded, and by the dissipation of others who without leave were full of idleness, in full on border of viciousness. Shakespeare.
No unruled hand to guide these unruled of things.

or the roughness of things. Although all their facilities they never furnished so much as one job.
South.

UNRULY. adj. Turbulent; ungovernable; licentious; tumultuous.

In sacred bands of wedlock ty'd
To Theron, a loose unruly swain;
Who had more joy to range the forest wide,
And chase the savage beast with busy pain. Spenser.

Down I come, like glittering Phaeton,
Wanting the manage of unruly jades. Shakespeare.
The best and foudest of his time hath been but raft; then must we look from his age to receive but unruly waywardness. Shakespeare.

The tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison.
James.

Thou dost a better life, and nobler vigour give;
Dost each unruly appetite controul. Johnson.
Love insults, disguised in the cloud,
And welcome force of that unruly crowd. Waller.

Passions kept their place, and transgressed not the boundaries of their proper natures; nor were the disorders begun, which are occasioned by the license of unruly appetites. Glanville.

You must not go where you may dangers meet.
Th' unruly sword will no distinction make,
And beauty will not there give wounds, but take. Dryden.

UNSAFE. adj. Not secure; hazardous; dangerous.

If they would not be drawn to seem his adversaries, yet others should be taught how unsafe it was to continue his friends. Hooker.

With speed retir'd,
Where erst was thickest fight, th' angelick throng.
And left large field, unsafe within the wind
Of such commotion. Milton.

Uncertain ways unsafe are,
And doubt a greater mischief than despair. Denham.

Phlegyan robbers made unsafe the road. Dryden.

UNSAFELY. adv. Not securely; dangerously.

Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage,
Unsafely just, break loose on this mad age;
So bad, that thou thyself hadst no defence
From vice, but barely by departing hence. Dryden.

As no man can walk, so neither can he think, uneasily or unsafely, but in using, as his legs, so his thoughts, amiss; which a virtuous man never doth. Green.

UNSAID. adj. Not uttered; not mentioned.

Chanticleer shall with his words unsaid. Dryden.
That I may leave nothing material unsaid, among the several ways of imitation, I shall place translation and paraphrase. Felton.

UNSAULTED. adj. Not pickled or seasoned with salt.

The maritick scurvy, induced by too great quantity of sea-salt, and common among mariners, is cured by a diet of fresh unsalted things, and watery liquor acidulated. Arbuthnot.

UNSAUTED. adj. [insalutatus, Latin.]
Not saluted.

Gods! I prate;
And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unsaluted. Shakespeare.

UNSACTIFIED. adj. Unholy; not consecrated; not pious.

Her obsequies have been so far enlarged
As we have warranty; her death was doubtful;
And but that great command o'erflows the order,
She should in ground unsanctified have lodg'd
Till the last trumpet. Shakespeare.

UNSATISFIED. adj. [insatiabilis, Latin.]
Not to be satisfied; greedy without bounds.

Unsatisfiable in their longing to do all manner of good to all the creatures of God, but especially men. Hooker.

Consider the Roman, for his unsatisfiable greediness, was called the gulph of avarice. Raleigh.

UNSATISFACTORINESS. n. f. Failure of giving satisfaction.

That which most does us from such trials, is their unsatisfactoriness, though they should succeed. Bayle.

UNSATISFACTORINESS. n. f.

1. Not giving satisfaction.

2. Not clearing the difficulty.

That speech of Adam, The woman thou gavest me to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat, is an unsatisfactory reply, and therein was involved a very impious error. Brown.

Latius to the cross, is point blank against the definition of the council of Nice; and it is an unsatisfactory answer to say, they only were against latius given to images for themselves. Stillingfleet.

UNSATISFIED. adj.

1. Not contented; not pleased.

Queen Elizabeth being to resolve upon a great officer, and being by some put in some doubt of that person whom she meant to advance, said, She was like one with a lantern looking at a man, and seemed unsatisfied in the choice of a man for that place. Bacon.

Flashy wit, who cannot fathom a large discourse, must be very much unsatisfied of me. Dryden.

2. Not settled in opinion.

Concerning the analytical preparation of gold they leave persons unsatisfied. Bayle.

3. Not filled; not gratified to the full.

Though he were unsatisfied in getting,
Yet in following he was most princely. Shakespeare.

Whether shall I, by justly pleasing
Him whom I hate, be more unjustly cruel
To her I love? or being kind to her,
Be cruel to myself, and leave unsatisfied
My anger and revenge? Denham.

Eternity human nature cannot look into, without a religious awe: our thoughts are lost in the endless view, and return to us weary and unsatisfied, without finding bounds or place to fix on. Rogers.

UNSATISFIEDNESS. n. f. [from unsatisfied.] The state of being not satisfied.

Between my own unsatisfiedness in confidence, and a necessity of satisfying the importunities of some, I was persuaded to chuse rather what was safe, than what seemed just. King Charles.

That unsatisfiedness with transitory pleasures, that men deplore as the unhappiness of their nature, is indeed the privilege of it, as it is the prerogative of men not to be pleased with such fond toys as children doat upon. Bayle.

UNSATISFYING. adj. Unable to gratify to the full.

Nor is fame only unsatisfying in itself, but the desire of it lays us open to many accidental troubles. Addison.

UNSAVOURINESS. n. f. [from unsavoury.]

1. Bad taste.

2. Bad smell.

If we concede a national unsavouriness in any people, yet shall we find the Jews less so than any. Brown.

UNSAVOURY. adj.

1. Tasteless.

Can that which is unsavoury be eaten without salt? or is there any taste in the white of an egg? Job.

2. Having a bad taste.

Unsavoury food, perhaps,
To spiritual natures. Milton.

3. Having an ill smell; fetid.

Some may emit an unsavoury odour, which may happen from the quality of what they have taken. Brown.

4. Unpleasant; disgusting.

Things of so mean regard, although necessary to be ordered, are notwithstanding very unsavoury, when they come to be disputed of; because dispatation presupposes some dislike in the matter. Hooker.

Unsavoury news; but how made he escape? Shakespeare.

To UNSE. v. n. To retract; to recede;
to deny what has been said.

Call you me fair? that fair again Shakspere.
Demetrius loves you fair. Milton.
Sly and unjoy, teign, flatter, or assure.

How soon
Would bright recall high thoughts, how soon unjoy
What feign'd submission (wore) Milton.

To say, and trait unjoy, pretending first
To say, professing next the spy,
Argues no leader, but a liar true'd. Milton.

There is nothing said there, which you may have occasion to unjoy hereafter. Atterbury.

UNSCALY. adj. Having no scales. Gay.
The joined is better, and unscaly loose.

UNSCARRED. adj. Not marked with wounds.

And must she die for this? O let her live:
So the may live unscarred from bleeding slaughter,
I will confess she was not Edward's daughter. Shakspere.

UNSCOTASTICK. adj. Not bred to literature.

Notwithstanding these learned disputants, it was to the unscotastick danielism that the world owed their peace and liberties. Locke.

UNSCHOLED. adj. Uneducated; not learned.

When the apostles were ordained to alter the laws of heretofore religion, they were, St. Paul excepted, un schooled and unlettered men. Hooker.

His hand,
Not sensible of fire, remain'd unscorch'd. Shaksp.

UNSCORUBED. adj. Not cleaned by rubbing.

Th' enrolled penalties,
Which have, like unscour'd armour hung by th'
wall,
And none of them been worn. Shakspere.

UNSCRATCHED. adj. Not torn.

I with much expedite it march
Have brought a counter-check before your gates,
To save unscratch'd your city's threaten'd checks. Shakspere.

UNSCRENNED. adj. Not covered; not protected.

Those bulls of burnish'd brass, the tops of churches are adorned with, derive their glittering brightness from their being exposed, unscrenched, to the sun's refulgent beams. Boyle.

UNSCRIPTURAL. adj. Not defensible by scripture.

The doctrine delivered in my sermon was neither new nor unscriptural, nor in itself false. Atterbury.

To UNSEAL. v. a. To open any thing sealed.

This new glare of light
Came sudden on his face, unseal'd his sight. Dryden.

UNSEEN. adj.

1. Wanting a seal.

Your oaths
Are words, and poor conditions but unseal'd. Shaksp.

2. Having the seal broken.

To UNSEAL. v. a. To rip; to cut open.

He unseal'd his hands, nor bid farewell to him,
Till he unseal'd him from the nape to th' chops,
And seal'd his head upon our battlements. Shaksp.

UNSEARABLE. adj. Inscrutable; not to be explored.

All is best, though we often doubt
What th' unsearable dispose Of highest wisdom brings about,
And ever best found in the close. Milton.

Thou hast conceal'd
This friendly sound, confusion, to relate Things else by me unsearable. Milton.

Job discomfited of the secrets of nature, and unsearable perfection of the works of God. Tillot.

These counsels of God are to us unsearable;
neither has he left in scripture any marks, by which we may infallibly conclude ourselves in that happy number he has chosen. Rogers.

It is a vast hinderance to the enrichment of our understandings, if we spend too much of our time among infinities and unsearables. Watts.

UNSEARABLE. n. f. Inscrutability
to be explored.

The unsearableness of God's ways should be a bridle to resist presumption, and not a sanctuary for spirits of error. Brumhall.

UNSEASONABLE. adj.

1. Not suitable to time or occasion; unfit;
untimely; ill-timed.

Zeal, unless it be rightly guided, when it endeavours the most busily to please God, forceth upon him those unseasonable offices which please him not. Hooker.

Their counsel must seem very unseasonable, who advise men to suspect that wherewith the world hath had, by their own account, twelve hundred years acquaintance. Hooker.

It is then a very unseasonable time to plead law,
when swords are in the hands of the vulgar. Spang.

The commissioners pulled down or defaced all images in churches, in such unseasonable fashion, as if done in hostility. Hayward.

This digression I conceived not unseasonable for this place, nor upon this occasion. Clarendon.

Haply mention may arise
Of something not unseasonable to ask. Milton.

Timothy lay out nights, and went abroad often at unseasonable hours. Arbuthnot.

2. Not agreeable to the time of the year.

Like an unseasonable stormy day,
Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,
As if the world were all dissolv'd in tears. Shaksp.

3. Late; as, unseasonable time of night.

UNSEASONABLENESS. n. f. Disagreement with time or place.

The moral goodness, usefulness and unseasonable-ness of moral or natural actions falls not within the verge of a brutal faculty. Hale.

UNSEASONABLY. adv. Not seasonably;
not agreeably to time or occasion.

Some things it asketh unseasonably, when they need not to be prayed for, as deliverance from thunder and tempest when no danger is nigh. Hooker.

Leave to fashion such high points as these,
Nor be ambitious, ere the time, to please;
Unseasonably wife, till age and cares
Have form'd thy soul to manage great affairs. Dryd.

By the methods prescribed, more good, and less mischief, will be done in acute distempers, than by medicines improperly and unseasonably applied. Arbuthnot.

Ulysses yielded unseasonably, and the strong passion for his country should have given him vigilance. Brown.

UNSEASONED. adj.

1. Unseasonable; untimely; ill-timed. Out of use.

Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill,
And these unseason'd hours perforce must add Unto your sickness. Shakspere.

I think myself in a better plight for a lender than you are; the which hath something embolden'd me to this unseason'd intrusion. Shakspere.

2. Unformed; not qualified by use.

'Tis an unseason'd courtier; advise him. Shaksp.

3. Irregular; inordinate.

The commissioners pulled down or defaced all images in churches, in such unseasonable and un-seasonal fashion, as if done in hostility. Hayward.

4. Not kept till fit for use.

5. Not salted; as, unseasoned meat.

UNSEASONED. adj.

His did you leave
Second to name, unseasoned by you,
To look upon the hideous god of war.
In disadvantage. Shakspere.

2. Not exemplified a second time.

Strange and unseasoned shapes of worms succeeded. Brown.

To UNSEASON. v. a. To disfigure; to divulge.

He that concealeth what he should disclose should not declare what he will do; but let printers be ware that the unseasoning of their sheets comes not
from themselves. Shakspere.

UNSEASON. v. a. To disfigure; to
divulge.

He that concealeth what he should disclose should
not declare what he will do; but let printers be ware that the unseasoning of their sheets comes not
from themselves. Shakspere.

UNSEASON. v. a. To disfigure; to
divulge.

He that concealeth what he should disclose should
not declare what he will do; but let printers be ware that the unseasoning of their sheets comes not
from themselves. Shakspere.

UNSEASON. v. a. To disfigure; to
divulge.

He that concealeth what he should disclose should
not declare what he will do; but let printers be ware that the unseasoning of their sheets comes not
from themselves. Shakspere.

UNSEASON. v. a. To disfigure; to
divulge.

He that concealeth what he should disclose should
not declare what he will do; but let printers be ware that the unseasoning of their sheets comes not
from themselves. Shakspere.

UNSEASON. v. a. To disfigure; to
divulge.

He that concealeth what he should disclose should
not declare what he will do; but let printers be ware that the unseasoning of their sheets comes not
from themselves. Shakspere.

UNSEASON. v. a. To disfigure; to
divulge.

He that concealeth what he should disclose should
not declare what he will do; but let printers be ware that the unseasoning of their sheets comes not
from themselves. Shakspere.

UNSEASON. v. a. To disfigure; to
divulge.

He that concealeth what he should disclose should

UNT

I would,
So my untruth had not provok'd him to it,
The king had cut off my head with my brother's.
Shakespeare.

4. False assertion.

In matter of speculation or practice, no untruth can possibly avail the patron and defender long;
and things most truly are likewise most behovefully spoken.
Hooker.

There is little hope for common justice in this dispute, from a man, who lays the foundations of his reasonings in so notorious an untruth. Atterbury.
UNUSABLE. adj. Unharmonious; not musical.

My news in dumb silence will I bury,
For they are harsh, untunable, and bad. Shal. sp.
A lifeless, merely unequal in its parts, giveth a harsh and untunable sound; which strings we call false. Bacon.

This harsh untunable pipe is no more fit than a raven's to join with the music of a choir. Tutler.
TO UNTUNE. v. a.

1. To make incapable of harmony.
Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark what discord follows. Shakespeare.

When the last and dreadful hour
This crumbling pageant shall devour,
The trumpet shall be heard on high,
The dead shall live, the living die,
And music shall untune the sky. Dryden.

The captives, as their tyrant shall require That they should breathe the fong, and touch the lyre.

Shall say; can Jacob's servile race rejoice,
Untune'd the music, and distune'd the voice? Prior.

2. To disorder.
O you kind gods!
Cure this great breach in his abused nature;
For untune'd and jarring senses O wind up
Of this child-changed father! Shakespeare.

UNTURNED. adj. Not turned.
New crimes invented, left unturnd no stone,
To make my guilt appear, and hide his own.
Dryden.

So eager hath the inquisitive part of mankind been to bring this matter to a fair issue, that no stone hath been left unturnd, no way whereby these things could have been brought forth of the sea, but one or other hath pitched upon.
Woodward.

UNTAUGHT. adj. Uninstructed; untaught.

Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble stock
Was graft with crab-tree slip, whose fruit thou art
Shakespeare.

Thy even thoughts with so much plainness flow,
Thou seem'st untutor'd infancy may know:
Yet to such height is all that plainness wrought,
We may admire, and letter'd pride be taught.
Prior.

1. Not prized; neglected.
He may not, as unvalued persons do,
Carve for himself; for on his choice depend
The safety and the health of the whole state.
Shakespeare.

2. Inestimable; above price.
I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels. Shakespeare.

UNVANQUISHED. adj. Not conquered; not overcome.

Shall I for laurel of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroy of the whole? Shaksp.

Victory doth more often fall by error of the unvanquish'd, than by the valour of the victorious.
Hayward.

They rise unvanquish'd.
Milton.

UNVARIABLE. adj. [invariable, French.]
Not changeable; not mutable.

The two great hinges of morality stand fix'd and unvariable as the two poles: whatever is naturally conducive to the common interest, is good; and what ever has a contrary influence is evil. Acorns.

UNVARIED. adj. Not changed; not diversified.

If authors cannot be prevailed with to keep close to truth and instruction, by unvaried terms, and plain, unphilosophical arguments, yet it concerns readers not to be imposed on. Locke.

They ring round the same unvaried chimes,
With fore returns of still expected rhymes. Pope.

UNVARNISHED. adj.
1. Not overlaid with varnish.
I will a round, unvarnish'd tale deliver.
Of my whole course of love, what dross, what churns.

I was his daughter with
Shakespeare.

UNVARYING. adj. Not liable to change.

We cannot keep by us any thing long, nor enjoy it in a state of duration, which consists in a constant fluctuation, as we can of certain lengths of extension, as inches marked out in permanent parcels of matter. Locke.

TO UNVEIL. v. a. [See VEIL and VAIL.]

1. To uncover; to divest of a veil.
The moon,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light.
Milton.

To the limpid sun direct thy way,
When the gay mom unveils her smiling ray. Pope.

2. To disclose; to show.
The providence, that's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Plato's gold;
Does ev'n our thoughts unroll in their dumb cradles.
Shakespeare.

Now unveil'd, the toilet stands display'd,
Each silver vase in my tick order laid. Pope.

UNVEILEDLY. adv. Plainly; without disguise.

UNU

Not knowing what use you will make of what has been unweildly communicated to you, I was unwilling that some things, which had cost me pains, should fall into any man's hands that seems to purchase knowledge with pains. Boyle.

UNVENTILATED. adj. Not fanned by the wind.

This, animals, to succour life, demand;
Nor should the air unventilated stand;
The air deep corrupted would contain Blue deaths. Blackmore.

UNVEERITABLE. adj. Not true.

All these proceeded upon unweertable grounds.
Brown.

UNVERSED. adj. Unacquainted; unskilled.

Not eastern monarchs, on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple thine to gay
As the bright natives of the unlabour'd field
Unvers'd in spinning, and unknown to till'd.

is no better than manifest disobedience. Hooker.

What moved the man to yield to her persuasions? Even the same cause that hath moved men to see, an unwillingness to give her, and to her sad, lest she should pine, and be over come with sorrow. Raleigh.

I see with what unwillingness
You lay upon me this command, and through your fears Discern your love, and therefore must obey you. Denham.

There is in most people a reluctance and unwilling- ness to be forgotten. We observe, even among the vulgar, how fond they are to have an inscription over their grave. Swift.

To UNWIND, v. a. pret. and past. passive unwound.

1. To separate any thing convolved; to untwist; to untwine.

All his subjects having by some years learned to hope for good and fear harm, only from her, that it should have in it a stronger virtue than his, to have unwound to deeply an entered vice. Sidney.

Empirick politicians use deceit
You boldly shew that skill which they pretend,
And work by means as noble as your end;
Which should you veil, we might know the clue,
As men do mist, till we came to you. Druiden.

2. To disentangle; to loose from entanglement.

Declining to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as in every point to unwind themselves where the traces of glozing teach he to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear to better incentives against that, which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy. Hooker.

As you unwind her love from him,
Lest it should unravel, and be good to none,
Bottom it on me. Shakespeare.

You grave, but reckless senators, have you thus Giv'd Hydra here to chafe an officer? Shaksp.

Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay. Shaksp.

He who of those delights can judge, and spare
To interpolate them oft, is not unwise. Milton.

This the Greeks say, this the barbarians; the wife and the unwise. Tillotson.

When kings grow stubborn, foolish, or unwise,
Each private man for publick good should rise. Dryden.

When the balance of power is duly fix'd in a state, nothing is more dangerous or unwise, than to give way to the first popular encroachments. Swift.

UNWISELY, adv. Weakly; not prudently; not wisely.

Lady Zelmire, like some, unwisely liberal, that more delight to give pretents than pay debts, chose rather to bestow her love upon me, than to recompense him. Sidney.

Unwisely we the wiser East Pity, supposing them oppress'd
With tyrant's force. Waller.

To UNWISH, v. a. To wish that which is, not to be.

My love, would you and I alone,
Without more help, could fight this royal battle.—
—Why now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men; Shaksp.

U N W

U N W

Friends all but now; even now
In quarters, and in terms like bride and groom
Dividing them for bed; and then but now,
As if some planet had unwitting men,
Swords out, and tilting one at other's burly.

Shakespeare

UNWITHDRAWING. adj. Continually liberal.

Wherefore did Nature pour her bounties forth,
With such a full and unwithdrawing hand,
Covering the earth with odours, fruits, and flocks?

Milton

UNWITHSTOOD. adj. Not opposed.

Cruelly plagues,
And Agonies, deep ting'd with blood, confests
What the Sibyls' vigorous unwithstood hand
Could do in rigid fight.

Philips

Let their zeal to the cause should any way be unwitnessed.

Hooker

UNWITTINGLY. adv. [Properly unwittingly, from unwitting.] Without knowledge; without consciousness.

In these fatal things it falls out that the high-working powers make second causes unwittingly accedent to their determinations.

Sidney

Those things are termed most properly natural agents, which keep the law of their kind unwittingly,
as the heavens and elements of the world
which can do no other will than they do.

Hooker

Atheists repudiate all title to heaven, merely for present pleasure; besides the extreme madness of running such a desperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive their lives here of that tranquility they seek for.

Bentley

UNWONTED. adj.

1. Uncommon; unusual; rare; infrequent.
His sad, dull eyes, sunk deep in hollow pits,
Could not endure the unwonted sun to view.

Spenser

My father's of a better nature
Than he appears by speech, this is unwonted
Which now came from him.

Shakespeare

Every unwonted meteor is portentous, and some divine prognostick.

Glanville

Thick breath, quick pulse, and heaving of my heart,

All signs of some unwonted change appear.

Dryden

2. Unaccustomed; unused.

Philoclea, who blessing, and withal smiling, making shamefacedness pleasant, and pleasure
shamefaced, tenderly moved her feet, unwonted
to feel the naked ground.

Sidney

Sea calves unwonted to fresh waters fly.

May

O how oft shall he
On faith and changed gods complain; and seas,
Rough with black winds and storms,

Milton

Unwonted shall admire.

I vow'd, late knight,
To tear the garter from thy craven leg.
Which I have done, because unworthily
Thou wast installed.

Shakespeare

Fearing lest my jealous aim might err,
And to unworthily disgrace the war,
I gave him gentle looks.

Shakespeare

If we look upon the Odyssey as a fiction, we consider it unworthily. It ought to be read as a story founded upon truth, adorned with embellishments of poetry.

Brown

UNWORTHINESS. n. f. Want of worth; want of merit.

A mind fearing the unworthiness of every word
that should be presented to her ears, at length brought it forth in this manner.

Sidney

O let not an excellent spirit do itself such wrong,
as to think where it is placed, embraced, and loved, there can be any unworthiness; since the weakest soul is not easier driven away by the sun, than that is chased away with too high thoughts.

Sidney

Every night he comes with songs compos'd
To her unworthiness; it nothing leads us
To elude him from our caves, for he persists.

Shakespeare

I fear'd to find you in another place;
But since you're here, my jealousy grows less.

Dryden

You will be kind to my unworthiness.
Have a true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, which will not suffer you to rise to a confidence unwarrantably pretended to by some.

Wake

UNWORTHY. adj.

1. Not deserving; whether good or bad.

The Athenian creed and dogology should remain in note; the one as a most divine explication of the chiefest articles of our christian belief; the other as an heavenly acclamation of joyful applause to his praises, in whom we believe; neither the one nor the other unworthy to be heard founding, as they are in the church of Christ.

Hooker

Every particular accident, not unworthy the remembrance, for brevity I wittingly pass over.

Kneller

2. Wanting merit.

Disgrace being vizarded,
Th' unworthy shews as faintly in the mask

Shakespeare

So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that which one unworthier may attain;

Shakespeare

And die with grieving
Are there unworthy men chosen to offices?

Whitgift

3. Mean; worthless; contemptible.

Tell me, Philoclea, did you ever see such a shepherd? did you ever hear of such a prince? and then tell me if a small or unworthy assault have conquered me?

Sidney

4. Not suitable; not adequate.

I bid it her feet a work, which was unworthy
her, but which I hope she will forgive.
Our friend's papers are in my hands, and I will take care to suppress things unworthy of him.

Pope to Swift

Care is taken to intersperse additions in such a manner, that scarce any book can be bought, without purchasing something unworthy of the author.

Swift

5. Unbecoming; vile.

The brutal action rous'd his manly mind:
Mov'd with unworthy usage of the maid,
He, though unarm'd, resolv'd to give her aid.

Dryden

UNWOUND. pret. and part. pass. of unwind. Untwined.

That others tie with withs, but old pitched ropes unwound are more lasting.

Mortimer

A rule of right unwritten, but delivered by tradition from one to another.

Spenser

The laws of England may be divided into the written law, and the unwritten.

Hale

2. Not containing writing.

As to his understanding, they bring him in view of all notion, a rude, unwritten blank, making him to be created as much an infant, as others are born.

Sidney

UNWROUGHT. adj. Not laboured; not manufactured.

O, prove at least to all of wiser thought,
Their hearts were fertile land, although unwrought.

Farmer

Yet thy moist clay is pliant to command,
Unwrought and easy to the potter's hand.

Now take the mold, now bend thy mind to feel
The first sharp motions of the forming wheel.

Dryden

UNWRUNG. adj. Not pinched.

We that have free souls, it touches us not, let the galled jade winch, our withers are unwring.

Shakespeare

UNYIELDED. adj. Not given up.

O'erpower'd at length, they force him to the ground,

Unyielded as he was, and to the pillar bound.

Dryden

TO UNYOKE. v. a.

1. To loose from the yoke.

Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful steers unyok'd, they took their course
East, west, north, south.

Shakespeare

Homer calls them like gods, and yet gives them
the employment of slaves, they unyoke the mules.

Bacon

2. To part; to disjoin.

Shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
So join'd in love, so strong in both,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret?

Shakespeare

UNYOKED. adj.

1. Having never worn a yoke.

Se'ven bullocks yet unyok'd for Phœbus chariot,
And for Diana sev'n untapped ewes.

Full, though unzon'd her bosom.

Pope

VOCABULARY. n. f. [vocabularium, Lat.
vocabulaire, French.] A dictionary, a lexicon; a wordbook.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and that they stand in awe of conjurations, which is nothing, not only in the dictionary of words,
but in the subtler vocabulary of Satan.

Pope

Among other books, we should be furnished with vocabularies and dictionaries of several sorts.

VOCAL. adj. [vocal, French; vocalis,
Latin.]

1. Having a voice.

Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues;
And there be words not made with lungs;
Sententious show'st! O let them fall!

Crayford

Their cadence is rhetorical.

Witless if I be silent, morn or even,

To hill, or valley, fountain, or fresh shade,

Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise.

Milton

Smooth-sliding Mincius, crown'd with reeds,

That strain I heard was of a higher mood.

None can animate the lyre,
And the mute strings with vocal souls inspire.

As Helen, in whole eyes ten thousand cupid dwell.

Dryden

Mennon, though stone, was counted vocal.

But 'twas the god, mean while, that spoke all.

Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing.

With prompting priest behind the hanging.

Uttered or modulated by the voice.

They which, under pretence of the law, ceremonial being abrogated, require the abrogation instrumental music, approving nevertheless the use of vocal melody to remain, must show some reason wherefore the one should be thought a less ceremony, and not the other.

Howe

They join'd their vocal worship to the choir
Of creatures waiting voice. Milton.

VOCALITY. n. f. [vocalitas, Latin; from vocal.] Power of utterance; quality of being utterable by the voice.

L and R being in extremes, one of roughness, the other of smoothness and freeness of vocality, are not easy in tract of vocal speech to be pronounced partially. Halder.

To VOCALIZE. v. a. [from vocal.] To form into voice.

It is one thing to give an impulse to breath alone, another thing to vocalize that breath, i. e. in its passage through the larynx to give it the sound of human voice. Halder.

VOCALLY. adv. [from vocal.] In words; articulately.

Although it is as natural to mankind to express their desires vocally, as it is for brutes to use their natural vocal signs; yet the forming of languages into this or that fashion, is a business of imitation. Hale.

VOCATION. n. f. [vocation, French; vocatio, Latin.]

1. Calling by the will of God.

Neither doth that which St. Paul, or other apostles, teach, enforce the utter disability of any other man's vocation thought requisite in this church for the saving of souls. Hooker.

They which thus were in God eternally for their intended admission to life, have, by vocation or adoption, God actually now in them. Hooker.

2. Summons.

What can be urged for them, who not having the vocation of poverty to scrabble, out of mere wantonness make themselves ridiculous? Dryden.

3. Trade; employment; calling.

He would think his service greatly rewarded, if he might obtain by that means to live in the light of his prince, and yet practise his own chosen vocation. Sidney.

God's mother, in a vision full of majesty, Will'd me to leave my base vocation. Shakspeare.
God has furnished men with faculties sufficient to direct them in the way they should take, if they will seriously employ them, when their ordinary vocations allow them the leisure. Locke.

4. It is used ironically in contempt.

But lest you should for honour take
The drunken quarrels of a rake,
Or when a whore in her vocation
Keeps punctual to an assignation. Swift.

VOCATIVE. n. f. [vocativus, French; vocativus, Latin.] The grammatical case used in calling or speaking to.

VOCIFERATION. n. f. [vociferatio, vociferus, Latin.] Clamour; outcry.

The lungs, kept too long upon the stretch by vociferation, or loud singing, may produce the same effect. Arbuthnot.

VOCIFEROUS. adj. [vocifero, Latin.] Clamorous; noisy.

Three three vociferous heralds rose to check the rout. Chapman.

Several templars, and others of the more vociferous kind of critics, went with a resolution to him, and insisted they were forced to laugh. Pope.

VOGUE. n. f. [vogue, French; from voguer, to float, or fly at large.] Fashion; mode; popular reception.

It is not more absurd to undertake to tell the name of an unknown person by his looks, than to such a man's faithfulness from the vogue of the world. South.

Cle may revive the obsolete words,
And banish those that now are moot in vogue. Roscommon.

What factions th' have, and what they drive at
In public vogue, or what in private. Hudibras.
In the vogue of the world, it passes for an exploit of honour, for kings to run away with whole countries that they have no pretence to. L'Estrange.

VOL. II.

No periodical writer, who always maintains his gravity, and does not sometimes sacrifice to the graces, must expect to keep in vogue for any time. Addison.

At one time they keep their patients to close and warm, as almost to smother them, and all on a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker.

VOICE. n. f. [vox, French; vox, voxis, Latin.]

1. Sound emitted by the mouth.

I assay to see
The works of men, or hear mortalities Expire a voice. Chapman.

2. Sound of the mouth, as distinguished from that uttered by another mouth.

Air in sounds that are not tones, which are all equal, admitteth much variety, as in the voices of living creatures, and in the voices of several men; for we can discern several men by their voices. Bacon.

3. Any sound made by breath.

O Marcus, I am warm'd, my heart
Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. Addison.

4. Vote; suffrage; opinion expressed.

Are you all resolv'd to give your voices?
But that's no matter, the greater part carries it. Shakspeare.

I've no words;
My voice is in my sword! thou bloodier villain
Than terms can give thee out. Shakspeare.

The state was betrayed by the multitude and corruption of voices, and must shortly perish, if not committed to the grave judgment of some few, for two hundred gave voices, reducing that multitude to fifty, who, for their experience, were holden for men of great gravity. Knolles.

Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
Of holy senates, and elect by voice. Dryden.

5. Language; words; expression.

Let us call on God in the voice of his church. Fell.

To VOICE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rumour; to report. Out of use.
Is this th' Athenian mission, whom the world
I lov'd to regardfully? Shakspeare.

It was voiced that the king purposed to put to death Edward Plantagenet, prisoner in the Tower, whereat there was great murmur. Bacon.

Many fought to feed
The early creditors of novelties,
By voicing him alive. Daniel.

2. To vote. Obsolete.

Your minds, pre-occupied with what
You rather must do, than what you should do,
Made you, against the grain, to voice him consul. Shakspeare.

To VOICE. v. n. To clamour; to make outcries. Obsolete.

Sur not questions of jurisdiction, and rather assume thy right in silence, than voice it with claims. Bacon.

It is not the gift of every person to harangue the multitude, to voice it loud and high. South.

VOICED. adj. [from the noun.] Furnished with a voice.

That's Erythra,
Or some angel voic'd like her. 'Tis she! my struggling soul
Would fain go out to meet and welcome her! Denham.

VOID. adj. [void, French.]

1. Empty; vacant.

The earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep. Genesis.
I'll get me to a place more void, and there Speak to great Caesar as he comes along. Shakspeare.

2. Vain; ineffectual; null; vacated.

If it be void, and to no purpose, that the names of men are so frequent in their books, what did move them to bring them in? Hooker.

My word shall not return void, but accomplish that which I please. Isaiah.
This custom made their whole government void, as an engine built against humane society, worthy to be fired and pulled down. Bacon.

Though the wisdom of a future parliament may find cause to declare this or that act of parliament void, yet there will be the same temper requisite to repeal it. Clarendon.

The two houses declared, that nothing which should from that time pass under the great seal, should be good and valid, but void and null. Clarendon.

Some kind of subjection is due from every man to every man, which cannot be made void by any power whatsoever. Swift.

3. Unfurnished; unoccupied.

Queen Elizabeth, importuned much to supply divers great offices that had been long void, answered nothing to the matter, but rose up on the sudden, and said, I am sure my office will not be long void. Camden.

4. Wanting; unfurnished; empty.

If some be admitted into the ministry, void of learning, or lewd in life, are all the rest to be condemned? Whitgift.
How void of reason are our hopes and fears! Druiden.

Being void of all friendship and enmity, they never complain. Swift.

5. Unsubstantial; unreal.

Sinfuls, idols, void and vain. Pope.

VOID. n. f. [from the adjective.] An empty space; vacuum; vacancy.

Pride, where wit fails, steeps us our defence,
And fills up all the mighty void of sense. Pope.
With what power
Were first th' unwieldy planets launch'd along Th' illustrious void? Thomson.

To VOID. v. a. [from the adjective; vulgar, French.]

1. To quit; to leave empty.

If they will fight with us, bid them come down,
Or void the field. Shakspeare.
Towards this passage, somewhat darker than the chamber which he voided, this assassinate gave him, with a back blow, a deep wound into his left side. Hutton.

2. To emit; to pour out.
The ascending water is vented by fits, every circumvolution voiding only to much as is contained in one belly. Wilkins.

3. To emit as excrement.

Excrements smell all to the same creature that voideth them, and the cat burieth what he voideth. Bacon.

Believ'd the heavens were made of stone,
Because the sun had voided one. Hudibras.

Hebly filaments, or matter voided by urine, are suspicious symptoms of a stone in the kidneys, especially if the patient has been subject to voiding of gravel. Arbuthnot.

4. To vacate; to nullify; to annul.

It was become a practice, upon any specious pretences, to void the security that was at any time given for money so borrowed. Clarendon.

To VOID. v. n.

1. To be emitted.

By the use of emulsions, and frequent emollient injections, his urine voided more easily. Hoffmann.

2. To receive what is emitted.

How in our voiding lobby halt thou stood,
And duly waited for my coming forth? Shakspeare.

VOIDABLE. adj. [from void.] Such as may be annulled.

If a metropolitan, pretending the party deceased had bona vacantia in divers dioceses, grants letters of administration, such administration is not void, but voidable by a sentence. Ayliffe.

VOIDANCE. n. f. [from void.]

1. The act of emptying.

2. Ejection from a benefice.

VOIDER. n. f. [from void.] A basket, in which broken meat is carried from the table.

A voider for the nonce,
I wrong the devil should I pick their bones. Clarendon.

VOIDNESS. n. f. [from void.]

U N W

Friends all but now; even now
In quarrel, and in terms like bride and groom
Divesting them for bed; and then but now,
As if some planet had unwitted men,
Sword drawn, and tilting one at other's breasts.

UNWITHDRAWING, adj. Continually liberal.

What force did Nature pour her bounties forth,
With such a full and unwithdrawing hand,
Covering the earth with odours, fruits, and flowers?

UNWITHSTOOD, adj. Not opposed.

And in account, deep ting'd with blood, confess
What the Sature's vigour unwithstood
Could do in rigid fight.

UNWITNESSED, adj. Wanting testimony, wanting notice.

Let their zeal to the cause should any way be unwitnessed.

UNWITTINGLY, adv. [Properly unwittingly, from unwitting.] Without knowledge; without consciousness.

In these fatal things it falls out that the high-
working powers make second causes unwittingly accessory to their determinations.

Those things are termed most properly natural
agents, which keep the law of their kind unwittingly,
as the heavens and elements of the world
which can do no other wise than they do.

Atheists repudiate all title to heaven, merely for present pleasure; besides the extreme madness of running such a desperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that tranquility they seek for.

UNWONTED, adj.

1. Uncommon; unusual; rare; infrequent.
His sad, dull eyes, sunk deep in hollow pits,
Could not endure the unwonted sun to view.

My father's of a better nature
Than he appears by speech, this is unwonted
Which now came from him.

Every unwonted meteor is portentous, and some divine prognostick.

Thick breath, quick pulse, and heaving of my heart,
All signs of some unwonted change appear.

2. Unaccustomed; unused.

Philocles, who blushing, and withal feeling,
making shamefacedness pleasant, and pleasure
shamefaced, tenderly moved her feet, unwonted
to feel the naked ground.

See calves unwonted to fresh waters fly.

O how oft shall he
On faith and changed gods complain, and fears,
Rough with black winds and storms,
Unwonted shall admire.

UNWORKING, adj. Living without labour.

Laws and unworking slothful persons in this being more than parasites, do not only keep to such of the money of a country in their hands, but make the publick pay them for it.

UNWORTHIPPED, adj. Not adored.

Unworthipp'd, unobey'd, the throne supreme.

UNWORTHILY, adv. Not according to desert; either above or below merit.

I vow'd, base knight,
To tear the garter from thy craven leg,
Which I have done, because unworthily.

Thou wast installed.
Fearing lest my jealous aim might err,
And to unworthily disgrace the man,
I gave him gentle looks.

If we look upon the Odyssey as all a fiction, we consider it unworthily. It ought to be read as a story founded upon truth, adorned with embellishments in poetry.

UNWORTHINESS, n. f. Want of worth; want of merit.

A mind fearing the unworthiness of every word
that should be presented to her ears, at length brought it forth in this manner.

U N W

O let not an excellent spirit do itself such wrong,
as to think where it is placed, embraced, and
loved, there can be any unworthiness; since the weakness is not easier driven away by the fun, than that is chaf'd away with too high thoughts.

Every night he comes with songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing needs us
To chide him from our eaves, for he persists.

I fear'd to find you in another place;
But since you're here, my jealousy grows less:
You will be kind to my unworthiness.

Have a true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, which will not suffer you to rise to a confidence unwarrantably pretended to by some.

UNWORTHY, adj.

1. Not deserving; whether good or bad.

The Athenian creed and dogmology should remain mute; the one as a most divine explication of the choicest articles of our christian belief; the other as an heavenly acclamation of joyful applause to his precepts, in whom we believe: neither the one nor the other unworthy to be heard founding, as they are in the church of Christ.

A very particular accident, not unworthy the remembrance, for brevity I wittingly pass over.

2. Wanting merit.

Degree being vizarded,
Th' unworthiest shews as fairly in the mask.

So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that which one unworthier may attain;
And die with grieving

Are there unworthy men chosen to offices?

3. Mean; worthless; contemptible.

Tell me, Philocles, did you ever see such a shepherd? did you ever hear of such a prince?
and then tell me if a small or unworthy assault have conquered me?

4. Not suitable; not adequate.

I bid it her feet a work, which was unworthy
her, but which I hope she will forgive.
Our friend's papers are in my hands, and I will take care to suppress things unworthy of him.

Care is taken to interperse additions in such a manner, that scarce any book can be bought, without purchasing something unworthy of the author.

5. Unbecoming; vile.

The brutal action rous'd his manly mind:
Mov'd with unworthy usage of the maid,
He, though unarm'd, resolv'd to give her aid.

UNWOUND, *pret. and part. pass. of un-
wind*. Untwined.

Thatchers tie with withs, but old pitched ropes
unwound are more lasting.

UNWOUNDED, adj.

1. Not wounded.

Our yet unwounded enemies.

2. Not hurt.

Oh blest with temper!
She who can love a sister's charms, or hear
Sighs for a daughter with unwounded ear.

To UNWRAPE. v. a. To open what is folded.

UNWREATH. v. a. To untwine.

The beads of wild oats, and of divers other wild plants, continually wreath and unwreath themselves, according to the temperature of the ambient air.

UNWRITING, adj. Not assuming the character of an author.

The peace of the honest unwriting subject was daily molested.

UNWRITTEN, adj.

1. Not written; not conveyed by writing;
oral; traditional.

A rule of right unwritten, but delivered by tradition from one to another.

V O C

The laws of England may be divided into the written law, and the unwritten.

2. Not containing writing.

As to his understanding, they bring him in void
of all notion, a rude, unwritten blank; making him to be created as much an infant, as others are born.

UNWROUGHT, adj. Not laboured; not
manufactured.

Oh prove at least to all of wiser thought,
Their hearts were fertile land, although unwrought.

Yet thy moist clay is pliant to command;
Unwrought and easy to the potter's hand;
Now take the mold, now bend thy mind to feel
The fast sharp motions of the forming wheel.

UNWRUNG, adj. Not pinched.

We that have free souls, it touches us not, let
the galled jade winch, our withers are unwring.

UNYIELDED, adj. Not given up.

O'erpower'd at length, they force him to the ground,
Unyielded as he was, and to the pillar bound.

To UNYOKE. v. a.

1. To loose from the yoke.

Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful steers unyok'd, they took their course
East, west, north, south.

Homer calls them like gods, and yet gives them
the employment of slaves; they unyoke the mules.

2. To part; to disjoin.

Shall these hands, to lately purg'd of blood,
So join'd in love, so strong in both,
Unyoke this seizure, and thus unyoke the mud?

UNYOKED, adj.

1. Having never worn a yoke.

Sev'n bullocks yet unyok'd for Phœbus chaise,
And for Diana sev'n unspotted ewes.

2. Licentious; unrestrained.

I will awhile uphold
The unyok'd humour of your silliness.

UNZONED, adj. Not bound with a girdle.

Early her motion seem'd, serene her air,
Full, though unzon'd her bosom.

VOCABULARY, n. f. [vocabulary, Lat.
vocabulaire, French.] A dictionary; a lexicon; a wordbook.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and that they stand in awe of conjurations, which is nothing, not only in the dictionary of words,
but in the subtiler vocabulary of Satan.

Among other books, we should be furnished with

1. To rumour; to report. Out of use.

Is this th' Athenian union, whom the world You'd so regardfully? Shakespeare.

It was raised that the king purposed to put to death Edward Plantagenet, prisoner in the Tower, whereto there was great rumour. Bacon.

Many sought to feed The easy creditors of novelities, By voicing him alive. Daniel.

2. To vote. Obsolete.

Your minds, pre-occupied with what You rather must do, than what you should do, Made you, against the grain, to voice him counsel. Shakespeare.

TO VOICE. v. n. To clamour; to make outcries. Obsolete.

Stir not questions of jurisdiction, and rather assume thy right in silence, than voice it with claims. Bacon.

It is not the gift of every person to harangue the multitude, to voice it loud and high. South.

VOICED. adj. [from the noun] Furnished with a voice.

That's Erythra, Or some angel voic'd like her. 'Tis she! my struggling soul Would join go out to meet and welcome her! Dent.

VOID. adj. [vide, French.]

1. Empty; vacant.

The earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep. Genesis.

I'll get me to a place more void, and there Speak to great Caesar as he comes along. Shaksp.

2. Vain; ineffectual; null; vacated.

If it be void, and to no purpose, that the names of men are so frequent in their books, what did more them to bring them in? Hooker.

My word shall not return void, but accomplish that which I please. Isaiah.

This custom made their whole government void, as an engine built against human society, worthy to be fired and pulled down. Bacon.

Though the wisdom of a future parliament may find cause to declare this or that act of parliament void, yet there will be the same temper requisite to repeal it. Clarendon.

The two houses declared, that nothing which should from that time pass under the great seal, should be good and valid, but void and null. Clarendon.

Some kind of subjection is due from every man to every man, which cannot be made void by any power whatsoever. Swift.

3. Unsupplied; unoccupied.

Queen Elizabeth, importuned much to supply divers great offices that had been long void, answered nothing to the matter, but rose up on the sudden, and said, I am sure my office will not be long void. Camden.

4. Wanting; unfurnished; empty.

If tone be admitted into the mutuality, void of learning, or lewd in life, are all the rest to be condemned? Whitgift.

How void of reason are our hopes and fears! Denden.

Being void of all friendship and civility, they never complain. Swift.

5. Unsubstantial; unreal.

Senseless, idle, void, and vain. Pope.

VOID. n. f. [from the adjective.] An empty space; vacuum; vacancy.

Pride, where wit fails, steps in to our defence, And fills up all the mighty void of sense. Pope.

With what power Were first th' unwieldy planets launch'd along. Thomson.

TO VOID. v. a. [from the adjective; vider, French.]

1. To quit; to leave empty.

If they will fight with us, bid them come down, Or void the field. Shakespeare.

Towards this passage, somewhat darker than the chamber which he voided, this affluence gave him, with a back blow, a deep wound into his left side. Wotton.

2. To emit; to pour out.

The ascending water is vented by fits, every convulsion voiding only so much as is contained in one heave. Wilkins.

3. To emit as excrement.

Excrements smell all to the same creature that voideth them, and the cat burneth what the voideth. Bacon.

Believ'd the heav'ns were made of stone, Because the sun had voided one. Hudibras.

Hebby filaments, or matter voided by urine, are suspicious symptoms of a stone in the kidneys, especially if the patient has been subject to voiding of gravel. Arbuthnot.

4. To vacate; to nullify; to annul.

It was become a practice, upon any specious pretences, to void the security that was at any time given for money to be borrowed. Clarendon.

TO VOID. v. n.

1. To be emitted.

By the use of emollients, and frequent emollient applications, his urine voided more easily. Wesman.

2. To receive what is emitted.

How in our voiding lobby hath thou stood, And duly waited for my coming forth? Shakespeare.

VOIDABLE. adj. [from void.] Such a may be annulled.

If a metropolitan, pretending the party decessed had bona vacantia in divers dioceses, grants letters of administration, such administration is not void, but voidable by a sentence. Ayliffe.

VOIDANCE. n. f. [from void.]

1. The act of emptying.

2. Ejection from a benefice.

VOIDER. n. f. [from void.] A basket, in which broken meat is carried from the table.

A voider for the nonce, I wrong the devil should I pick their bones. Ciceland.

VOIDNESS. n. f. [from void.]

1. Emptiness; vacuity.

2. Nullity; inefficiency.

3. Want of substantiality.

It is by you and their nakedness and void of all mixt bodies, good divines are of opinion, that the work of the creation was not in itself dignified by days.

VOLTEUR. n. f. [French.] Carriage, transportation by carriage. Not in use. They ought to be executed by volture or carriage.

VOLANT. adj. [volans, Latin; volant, French.]

1. Flying; passing through the air.

The point or flying automaton, are such mechanical contrivances as have a self motion, whereby they are carried aloft in the air, like birds. Hudkins

2. Nimble; active.

His volant touch
Instruct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and purined transmute the resonant figure.

Blind British bards, with volant touch,
Traverse jargonous strings, whose solemn notes
Provoke to humber levels.

VOLATILE. adj. [volatilis, Latin.]

1. Flying; passing through the air.

The caterpillar towards the end of summer waxeth volatile, and turneth to a butterfly.

There is no creature only volatile, or no flying animal but hath feet as well as wings, because there is not sufficient food for them always in the air.

2. [volatile, French.] Having the power to pass off by spontaneous evaporation.

In vain, though by their powerful art they land Volatile Hermes.

When arsenick with soap gives a regulus, and with mercury sublimates a volatile bubble, like butter of antimony; doth not this show that arsenick, which is a substance totally volatile, is compounded of fixed and volatile parts, strongly cohering by a mutual attraction; so that the volatile will not ascend without carrying up the fixed?

3. Lively; hekle; changeable of mind;

fall of spirit; airy.

Active spirits, who are ever skimming over the surface of things with a volatile temper, will fix nothing in their mind.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever, just the reverse of Mr. Pope, who hath always loved a domestic life.

VOLATILE. n. f. [volatile, French.] A winged animal.

The air conveys the heat of the sun, maintains fires, and serves for the flight of volatiles.

VOLATILITAS. n. f. [volatilité, Fr.]

VOLATILITAS. n. f. [from volatile.]

1. The quality of flying away by evaporation; not fixity.

Upon the compound body, closely observe the colour, fragility, or pliancy, the volatility or fixation, compared with simple bodies.

Of volatility the utmost degree is, when it will fly away without returning.

Heat causeth the spirits to search some issue out of the body, as in the volatility of metals.

The animal spirits cannot, by reason of their volatility and volatileness, be discovered to the sense.

The volatility of mercury argues that they are not much longer; nor may they be much less, lest they lose their opacity.

By the spirit of a plant, we understand that pure, elaborated oil, which, by reason of its extreme volatility, exhales spontaneously, in which the odour or smell consists.

2. Mutability of mind; animosity; inconstancy.

VOLATILIZATION. n. f. [from volatilize.]

The act of making volatile.

Chymists have, by a variety of ways, attempted to wane the constitution of the salt of tartar.

TO VOLATILIZE. v. a. [volatiliser, Fr.]

from volatile.] To make volatile; to subtilize to the highest degree.

Spirit of wine has a reactive power, in a middle degree between those of water and oily substances, and accordingly seems to be composed of both, united by fermentation: the water, by means of some saline spirits with which it is impregnated, dissolving the oil, and volatilizing it by the action.

Spirituous liquors are so far from attenuating, volatilizing, and rendering perishable the animal fluids, that they rather condense them.

VOLCANO. n. f. [Italian, from Vulcan.]

A burning mountain.

Navigators tell us there is a burning mountain in an island, and many volcanoes and fiery hills.

When the Cyclops o'er their anvils sweat,
From the volcano goals eruption rise,
And curling fleets of smoke obscure the skies.

Subterraneous minerals ferment, and caule earthquakes, and caule tumorous eruptions of volcanoes, and tumble down broken rocks.

Why want we then incursions on the form,
On flame, or volcano? They perform
Their mighty deeds; they be so like our day,
And spread their ample detests in a day.

VOL. n. f. [vole, French.] A deal at cards, that draws the whole tricks.

Pat fix, and not a living fool!

I might by this have won a vole.

VOLERY. n. f. [volerie, French.] A flight of birds.

An old boy, at his first appearance, is sure to draw on him the eyes and chipping of the whole town.

VOLITION. n. f. [volition, Latin.] The act of willing, the power of choice exerted.

To say that we cannot tell whether we have liberty, because we do not understand the manner of volition, is all one as to say, that we cannot tell whether we see or hear, because we do not understand the manner of sensation.

There is as much difference between the approbation of the judgment, and the actual volitions of the will, as between a man's viewing a desirable thing with his eye, and reaching after it with his hand.

Volition is the actual exercise of the power the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it; or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, by directing any particular action, or its forbearance.

VOLITIVE. adj. Having the power to will.

They not only perfect the intellectual faculty, but the volitive, making the man not only more knowing, but more wise and better.

VOLLEY. n. f. [volée, French.]

1. A flight of shot.

From the wood a volley of shot flew two of his company.

More on his guns relies than on his sword,
From whence a fatal volley we received.

2. A burst; an emission of many at once.

A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off.

Diffident fense with modest caution speaks;
It still looks home, and short exursions makes;
But rattling content in full volleys breaks.

VO'LLY. v. n. To throw out.

The holding every man shall beat as loud
As his strong side can be.

VOLLEED. adj. [from volley.] Disploded; discharged with a volley.

I flood

Thy stercof, when in battle to thy aid
The blating volley'd thunder made all speed.

The Gallick navy, impotent to bear
This noise, d'it under torn, disover'd, loud.

VOLTE. n. f. [volte, French.]

Volt figures round or a circular tread: a gate of two treads made by a horse going sideways: not a center; so that the two treads make parallel lines, the one which is made by the fore feet, and the other by the hinder feet smaller, the members bearing outwards, and the croupe approaching towards the center.

VOLUBILITY. n. f. [volubilité, French; volubilitas, from volubilis, Latin.]

1. The act or power of rolling.

Volubility, or aptness to roll, is the property of a bowl, and is derived from its roundness.

Then celestial spheres should forget their waltz motions, and by irregular volatility turn the wheels any way, as it might happen.

2. Activity of tongue; fluency of speech.

Say the he mute, and will not speak a word,
Then I'll commend his volubility.

He exposted himself with great volubility of words, natural and proper.

He had all the French assurance, cunning, and volubility of tongue.

She ran over the catalogue of diversions with such a volubility of tongue, as drew a gentleman primed from her father.

3. Mutability; habilityness to revolution.

He that's a victor this moment, may be a slave the next; and this volatility of human affairs, is the judgment of providence, in the punishment of oppression.

VOLUBLE. adj. [volubilis, Latin.]

1. Formed so as to roll easily; formed so as to be easily put in motion.

Neither the weight of the matter of which a vessel is made, nor its round comble form, which meeting with a precipice, do necessarily continue the motion of it, are any more imputable to that choice creature in its first motion.

The adventurous cupidities may produce volatility in the matter they pervade, by expelling those volatile particles, which, whilst they continued did by their shape unfit for cohesion, or by their motion, oppose cohesion.

2. Rolling; having quick motion.

This lets voluble earth,
By shorter flight to th' east, had left him there.

Then voluble and bold; now hid, now seen,
Among thick woven arborets.

3. Nimble; active. Applied to the tongue.

A friend promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in certain juices, which render it so wonderfully pliant and suppliant.

There, with a voluble and suppliant tongue, become mere echoes.

4. Fluent of words. It is applied to the speech, or the speaker.

Canto, a brave very voluble, no farther estimable, than in putting on the meer form of civil and humane seeming, for the better composing of his loose affection.

It voluble and sharp discourse be married,
Unkindness blunts it more than marble hard.

VOLUME. n. f. [volumen, Latin.]

1. Something rolled, or convolved.

2. As much as seems convolved at once, as a fold of a serpent, a wave of water.

Therefore and so I can remember well,
Within the volume of which time I've been Hours dreadful, and things strange.

Unoppos'd they e'er their love their force,
Or wind in volumes to their former course.

Behind the general mends his weary pace,
And silently to his revenge he calls
So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volute trails.

Thames' fruitful tides flow through the vale in silver volumes play.

Fenton.

By the insinuations of these crystals, the volumes of air are driven out of the watry particles, and many of them uniting, form larger volumes, which thereby have a greater force to expand themselves Cheyne.

3. [volume, French.] A book; so called, because books were anciently rolled upon a roll.

Gay on all this while his book did read,
Ne yet has ended; for it was a great

And ample volume, that doth far exceed
My leisure, so long leaves here to repeat. Spenser

Calmly, I do beseech you.—
A e, as an holler, that for the poorest piece

Will bear the name by th' volume Shakespeare.
The most sagacious man is not able to find out any mistake or error in this great volume of the world.

I shall not now enlarge on the wrong judgments whereby men mislead themselves. This would make a volume Locke.

It one short volume could comprize
All that was witty, learn'd and wise,
How would it be esteem'd and read? Suift

VOLUMINOUS, adj. [from volume.]
1. Consisting of many complications.

The serpent roll'd voluminous and vast. Milton

2. Consisting of many volumes, or books.

If heav'n's wate aught of fate, by what the stars
I voluminous, or single characters

In their conjunction met, gave me to spell. Milton

There is pleasure in doing something new, though never so little, without pattering the world with voluminous transcriptions. Grant

The most severe reader makes allowances for many reils and nodding places in a voluminous water. Spectator

3. Copious; diffusive.

He did not bear contradiction without much passion, and was too voluminous in discourse. Clarendon

VOLUMINOUSLY, adv. [from voluminous.]
In many volumes or books.

The controversies are hotly managed by the divided schools, and voluminously every where huddled. Granville

VOLUNTARILY, adv. [volontiers, French; from voluntary.] Spontaneously; of one's own accord; without compulsion.

Sub there is no likelihood that ever voluntarily
they will seek instruction at our hands, it remaineth that unless we will suffer them to perish, salvation must seek them. Hooker

To be agents voluntarily in our own destruction, against God and nature. Hooker

Self preservation will oblige a man voluntarily, and by choice, to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. South

VOLUNTARY, adj. [volontaire, Fr.
voluntarius, Latin.]

1. Acting without compulsion; acting by choice.

God did not work as a necessary, but a voluntary agent, intending before hand, and decreeing with forethought, that which did outwardly proceed from him.
Hooker

The lottery of my destiny
Runs me the right of voluntary choosing. Shakespeare

2. Willing; acting with willingness.

A voluntary was no more; her guard away,
To hit a voluntary prey. Pope

3. Done by design; purposed.

He was by opping a tree, and his ax-head fell on the bely, out of his hand, and kills another man; by here is indeed man-slaughter, but no murder. Perkins

4. Done without compulsion.

The forbearance denotes the forbearance in action, consequent to an order of the mind. Locke

The old duke is banished; the new duke, and the other lords, have put themselves into voluntary exile with him. Shakespeare

They must have recourse to abstinence, which is but voluntary fasting, and to exorcise, which is but voluntary labour. Scud

5. Acting of his own accord; spontaneous.

The publick prayers of the people of God, in churches thoroughly settled, but never able to be voluntary duties, proceeding from any man's ex-temporal wit. Hooker

Thoughts which voluntary move Harmonious numbers. Milton

VOLUNTARY, n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A volunteer; one who engages in any affair of his own accord.

All the unsettled humours of the land,
Rath, meconfid'rate, fiery voluntaries. Shakespeare

Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impulse. Shakespeare

The bordering wars were made altogether by voluntaries, upon their own head. Davies

Aids came in partly upon voluntaries, and partly voluntaries from all parts. Bacon

2. A piece of music played at will, without any settled rule.

Whistling winds like organs play'd,
Until their voluntaries made
The waken'd earth in odorous rife,

To be her morning sacrifice. Cleaveland

By a voluntary before the first lesson, we are prepared for admission of those divine truths, which we are shortly to receive. Spectator

VOLUNTEER, n. f. [volontaire, French.]

A soldier who enters into the service of his own accord.

Congreve, and the author of the Relapse, being the principals in the dispute, I satisfy them, as for the volunteers, they will find themselves affected with the misfortune of their friends. Collier

All Asia now was by the ears;
And gods beat up for volunteers

To Greece and Troy. Prior

To VOLUNTEER, v. n. To go for a soldier. A cant word.

Leave off the se wagers, for inconference speaking,
The city needs not your new tricks for breaking
And if you fallants lose, to all appearing,
You'll want an equipage for volunteering. Dryden

VOLUNTARY, n. f. [voluptaire, Fr.
voluptuarius, Latin.] A man given up to pleasure and luxury.

Does not the voluntary understand, in all the liberties of a loose and a lewd conversation, that he runs the risk of body and soul? L'Estrange

The parable was intended against the voluptu-aries, men who lived like heathens, dissolutely, without regarding any of the restraints of religion. Atterbury

VOLUPTUOUS, adj. [voluptuosus, Lat.
voluptuex, French.] Given to excess of pleasure; luxurious.

He then deceives, deceiv'd in his deceit;
Made drunk with drugs of dear voluptuous receipt.

If a new sect have not two properties, it will not spread. The one is, the supplanting, or the opposing of authority established; the other is, the giving license to pleasures, and a voluptuous life. Bacon

Thou wilt bring me soon
To that new world of light and bliss, among
The gods, who live at ease, where I shall reign
At thy right hand voluptuous, without end. Milton

Then swol'n with pride, into the laze I fell;
Of fair salacious looks, several traits,
Soft'n'd with pleasure, and voluptuous life. Milten

Speculative atheism subtils only in our speculation, whereas really human nature cannot be guilty of the crime. Indeed a few sensual and voluptuous persons may for a season eclipse this native light of the soul, but can never wholly smother and extinguish it. Bentley

VOLUPTUOUSLY, adv. [from voluptuous.]
Luxuriously; with indulgence of excelsive pleasure.

Had I a dozen sons, I had rather eleven died nobly for their country, than one voluptuously turteit out of action. Shakespeare

This cannot be done, if my will be so worldly or temporally disposed, as never to infer me to think of them, but perpetually to carry away and apply
my mind to other things. South

VOLUPTUOUSNESS, n. f. [from voluptuous.] Luxuriolness; addicetdness to excess of pleasure.

There's no bottom
In my voluptuousness, your wives, your daughters,
Your nation, and your minds, could not fill up
The excess of my lust. Shakespeare

If he fill'd his viceroy with his voluptuousness,
Full tarsens, and the dynasts of his bowes,
Call on him for it. Shakespeare

Here, where full evening is, not noon nor night;
Where no voluptuousness, yet all delight. Donne

These sons of Epicurus, the voluptuousness and irreligion, wait pass for the only wits of the age. South

You may be free, unless Your other lord forbids, voluptuousness. Dryden

VOLUPTUOUS, n. f. [volutatio, Latin.]
Wallowing; rolling.

VOLUTE, n. f. [volute, French.] A member of a column.

That part of the capitals of the Ionick, Cornu-thian, and Composite orders, which is supposed to represent the bark of trees twisted and turned into spiral lines, or, according to others, the head distils of virgins in their long hair. According to Vitruvius, those that appear above the stems in the Cornuthian order, are sixteen in every capital, four in the Ionick, and eight in the Composite. These volutes are more especially remarkable in the Ionick capital, representing a pillow or cushion laid between the abacus and columns; whence that ancient architect calls the voluta pulvinus. Horn

It is said there is an Ionick pillar in the Santa Maria Trinita here, where the marks of the capitals are still to be seen on the volute; and that Palladio learned from thence the working of that difficult problem. Addison

VOMICA, n. f. [Latin.] An encysted tumour in the lungs.

If the ulcer is not broke, it is commonly called a vomica, attended with the same symptoms as an empyema, because the vomica communicating with the vessels of the lungs, must necessarily void some of the purid matter, and taint the blood. Arbuthnot

VOMICK, n. f.

Vomick is the nucleus of a fruit of an East India tree, the wood of which is the lignum cubi-bunum, or Indian wood of the shops. It is flat, compressed, and round, of the breadth of a shilling, and about the thickness of a crown piece. It is certainly potent to quench and bleed, and taken internally, in small doses, it detaches the whole human frame, and brings on convulsions. Hill

To VOMIT, v. n. [vomo, Lat.] To cast up the contents of the stomach.

The dog, when he is sick at the stomach, knows his cure, falls to his guly, vomits, and is well. More

To VOMIT, v. a. [vomit, Fr.]

1. To throw up from the stomach: often with up or out.

As though some world unknown,
By pamper'd nature's store too prodigially fed,
And vomiting therewith, her forces all commited. Dryden

The vomit out Jonah upon the dry land. Jonah

Vomiting is of life, when the febricity of the stomach requires it. Boerhaave

Weak stomachs vomit up the wine that they drink in too great quantity, and the ferment our ear. Boerhaave

2. To throw up with violence from any hollow.

VOMIT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The matter thrown up from the stomach.

He had cast up the wealth by his devour'd,
Like trout from his passion, entire, purid. South

VOT

2. An emetick medicine; a medicine that causes vomit.

This vomit may be repeated often, if it be found to be useful. Markham
Whether a vomit may be safely given, must be judged by the circumstances; at there be any symptoms of an inflammation on the stomach, a vomit is extremely dangerous. Arbuthnot

VOMITION. n. f. [from vomito, Lat.] The act or power of vomiting.

How many have saved their lives, by spewing up their debauch? Whereas, if the stomach had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died. Grew

VOMITIVE. adj. [from vomit, Fr.] Emetick; causing vomits.

From the vitriolous quality, mercurius dulcis, and vitriol vomitive, occasion black eruptions. Brown

VOMITORY. adj. [from vomitoire, Fr. vomitarius, Lat.] Proceeding vomits; emetick.

Since regulus of sublim, or salts of antimony, will communicate to water or wine a purging or vomitory operation, yet the body itself, after iterated infusions, abates of virtue or weight. Brown
Some have vomited up such bodies as these, namely, thick, dark, black pus, which, by framing, they vomit spagum, or by taking vomitans privately. Harris

VORACIOUS. adj. [from vorace, Fr. vorax, Latin.]

1. Greedy to eat; ravenous; edacious.

So voracious is this hawk grown, that it draws in every thing to feed it. Gower, of the tongue

2. Rapacious; greedy.

VORACIOUSLY. adv. [from voracious.]

Greedy; ravenously.

VORACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from voracit  , Fr.]

VORACITY. n. f. [from voracitas, Lat. from vorax.]

Greediness; ravening; ravenousness.

He is as well contented with this, as those that with the rancies of the earth pamper their voracity. Sandys

Creatures by their voracity pernicious, have commonly fewer young. Deham

VORTEX. n. f. In the plural vortexes. [Latin.] Any thing whirled round.

If many contiguous vortexes of molten pitch were each of them as large as those which some suppose to revolve about the sun and fixed stars, yet these, and all their parts, would by their tenacity and fullness communicate their motion to one another. Newton

Nothing else could impel it, unless the ethereal matter be supposed to be carried about the sun, like a vortex, or whirlpool, as a vehicle to convey it and the rest of the planets. Hentley

The gathering number, as it moves along,

Involves a vast involuntary throng;

Who gently drawn, and struggling lefts and lefts,

Roll in her vortex, and her power controls. Pope

VORTICAL. adj. [from vortex.] Having a whirling motion.

If three equal round vessels be filled, the one with cold water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors be stirred about alike, to give them a vortical motion; the pitch, by its tenacity, will lose its motion quickly; the oil, being less tenacious, will keep it longer; and the water being still less tenacious, will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time. Newton

It is not a magnetical power, nor the effect of a vortical motion, those common attempts towards the explanation of gravity. Bentley

VOTARIST. n. f. [from votus, Lat.] One devoted to any person or thing; one given up by a vow to any service or worship; votary.

I with a more strict restraint

Upon the sisterhood, the votaries of St. Clare. Shakspeare

Earth, yield me roots! What is here?

Gold! yellow, glittering, precious gold!

No, gods, I am no idle votary! Shakspeare

VOT

The grey-headed vein,
Like a sad votary in palmer's weed,
Role from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain. Milton

VOTARY. n. f. One devoted, as by a vow, to any particular service, worship, study, or state of life.

Wherefore waste I time to count thee?

Thou art a votary to fond desire. Shakspeare

Thou, faint god of sleep! forget that I

Was ever known to be thy votary.

No more my pillow shall thine altar be,

Nor will I seek any more to thee

Myself a nothing sacrifice. Crashaw

'Twas the coldness of the votary, and not the prayer, that was in fault, whenever fervor was declined at the public office of the church. Fell

By the means, men worship the idols which have been set up in their minds, and stamping the characters of divinity upon absurdities and errors, become zealous votaries to bulls and monkeys. Locke

The enemy of our happiness has his servants and votaries among those who are called by the name of the son of God. Hogers

How can heavenly wisdom prove

An instrument to earth's love?

Know'st thou not yet, that men commence thy votaries for want of sense? Swift

VOTARY. adj. Consequent to a vow.

Superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firm as butchers by occupation, and votary resolution is made equippment to custom, even in matter of blood. Bacon

VOTARESS. n. f. [female of votary.] A woman devoted to any worship or state.

The imperial votress pulled on

In maiden meditation, fancy free. Shakspeare

His mother was a votress of my order;

And, as the spiced Indian air by night,

Full often the hath gossip'd by his side. Shakspeare

No votary this votress needs,

Her very syllables are beads. Cleveland

Thy votress from my tender years I am;

And love, like thee, the woods and Tylan game. Dryden

What force have pious vows? the queen of love

His sister sends, her votress from above. Pope

VOTE. n. f. [from votum, Latin.] Suffrage;

voice given and numbered.

He that joins instruction with delight,

Profit with pleasure, carries all the votes. Reform

How many have no other ground for their tenets, than the sup old honesty or learning of those of the same persuasion? as if truth were to be established by the vote of the multitude. Locke

The final determination arises from the majority of opinions or votes in the assembly, because they ought to be swayed by the superior weight of reason. Watts

TO VOTE. v. a.

1. To choose by suffrage; to determine by suffrage.

You are not only in the eye and ear of your master, but you are also a favourite, the favourite of the time, and to are in his bottom also, the whole hath also voted you, and doth to esteem of

you. Bacon

2. To give by vote.

The parliament voted them one hundred thousand pounds, by way of recompence for their interings. Swift

VOTER. n. f. [from votus.] One who has the right of giving his voice or suffrage.

Elections growing chargeable, the voters that in the bulk of the common people, have an universally seduced into bribery, perjury, dissimulation, malice, and fraud. Swift

He hates an action bare,

Can sometimes drop a voter's claim.

And give up party to his lane. Swift

VOTIVE. adj. [from votus, Lat.] Given by vow.

Such in this temple you may find,

On votive tablets to the life portray'd. Dryden

Venus! take my votive glass;

Since I am not what I was,

VOW

What from this day I shall be,
Venus! let me never see.

TO VOUCH. v. a. [from voucher, Norman Fr.]

1. To call to witness; to obtest.

The sun and day are witnesses for me;

Let him who fights unseen relate his own;

And touch the silent stars and conscious moon. Dryden

2. To attest; to warrant; to declare; to maintain by repeated affirmations.

You do not give the cheer; the feast is told

That is not often touch'd, while its making,

'Tis given with welcome. Shakspeare

The consistency of the discourse, and the pertin-ency of it to the design he is upon, touches it worthy of our great apostle.

They made him assumed to touch the truth of the relation, and afterwards to credit it. Atterbury

TO VOUCH. v. n. To bear witness; to appear as a witness; to give testimony.

He declares he will not believe lies, until the elector of Hanover shall vouch for the truth of what he hath so solemnly affirmed. Swift

VOUCH. n. f. [from the verb.] Warrant,

attestation.

What praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed? one that, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very males

stick? Shakspeare

VOUCHER. n. f. [from touch.]

1. One who gives witness to any thing.

All the great writers of that age stand up together

as vouchers for one another's reputation. Spectator

I have added nothing to the malice or absurdity of them; which it behoves me to declare, since the vouchers themselves will be so soon lost. Payne

2. Testimony.

Better to starve,

Than crave the hire which first we do deserve

Why in this wretched gown should I stand here,

To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear

Their needful voucher? Shakspeare

The stamp is a mark, and a public voucher, that a piece of such denomination is of such a weight, and of such a fluency, as it has to much silver in it. Payne

TO VOUCHSAFE. v. a. [from vouch and safe.]

1. To permit any thing to be done without danger.

2. To condescend to grant.

He grew content to mark their speeches, the surveil at such wit in shepherds, after to like their company, and lastly to vouchsafe conference. Swift

Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two?

-Two thousand, fair woman, and I'll

Vouchsafe thee hearing. Shakspeare

But it is the sense of two! from such delight

Beyond all other, hath the same vouchsafed

To cattle and each beast. Milton

It is not I, by the apostle, that God has afforded to the heathens the means of eternal life, and yet I will not affirm that God will give eternal life, to whom the sound of the gospel never reached. Swift

TO VOUCHSAFE. v. n. To design; to con-descend; to yield.

Do I not see Zeluinde, who does not think a thought which is not first weighed by wisdom as a virtue? do I not the vouchsafe to love me with like ardour? Sidney

Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,

Of these supposed crimes to give me leave

By circumstance but to acquit myself. Shakspeare

Vouchsafe, illustrious Ormond, to behold

What power the charms of beauty had of old. Dryden

VOUCHSAFELEMENT. n. f. [from vouchsafe.]

Grant; condescension.

The infinite superiority of God's nature, places

a vast disparity to what his greatest commands and vouchsafements, and his boundless, and therefore to his creatures incommunicable, condescensions. Payne

VOW. n. f. [from vovum, Lat.]

1. Any promise made to a divine power;

an act of devotion, by which some part of life, or some part of possessions, is consecrated to a particular purpose.

The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows; they are polluted offerings. Shakespeare

Where honour or where conscience does not bind, No other law shall shackle me, 'Save to myself I will not be,

Nor shall my future actions be confin'd

By my own present mood.

Who by resolves or vows engag'd does stand

For days that yet belong to fate,

Does, like an unthrill, mortgage his estate

Before it comes into his hand.

The bondman of the cloister is

All that he does receive does always owe;

And still, as time comes in, it goes away,

Not to enjoy, but debts to pay.

Unhappy flower, and pupil to a bell,

Which his hour's work, as well as hours, does tell.

Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell.

If you take that vow and that wish to be all one, you are mistaken; a wish is a far lower degree than a vow. Harwood

She sets for his return with vain devotion pays. Dryden

2. A solemn promise, commonly used for a promise of love or matrimony.

By all the vows that ever men have broke,

In number more than ever woman spoke. Shakespeare

Those who wear the wedding on their brow,

Were knights of love, who never broke their vow,

From to their plighted faith. Dryden

To Vow, v. a. [vow, Fr. votus, Lat.]

1. To consecrate by a solemn dedication; to give to a divine power.

David often vow'd unto God the sacrifice of praise, and thanksgiving to the congregation. Hosker

For not pay unto the Lord. Booms

When we have not only vow'd, but delivered them over into the possession of Almighty God, for the maintenance of his public worship, and the sanctification thereof, they are not now arbitrary, nor to be revoked. Speelman

Whoever took these irregular men,

With burden of a tickle, weak and faint,

But hears them taking of religion then,

And vow'd of their soul to ev'ry tint. Davies

This plant Latinus, when his town he wall'd,

Then found, and from the tree Laureum call'd;

And last, in honour of his new abode,

He vow'd the laurel to the laurel god. Dryden

2. To devote, a ceremonial phrase.

To vow Harvey, upon a meagre and a consideration, I have vow'd this my labour. Wentworth

To Vow, v. n. To make vows or solemn promises.

Do vow how unregard'd now,

That piece of beauty past.

There was a time, when I vow'd you

To that alone, but now the fate of faces. Suckling

Vow'd, part. pass. [from the verb.] Consecrated by solemn declaration.

Vowel, n. f. [voyelle, Fr. vocalis, Lat.] A letter which can be uttered by itself.

I distinguish the letters into vowels and consonants,

yet not wholly upon their reason, that a vowel may be sounded alone, a consonant not without a vowel, which will not be found all true; for many of the consonants may be sounded alone, and some joined together without a vowel; as, bl, ft; and as we pronounce the latter syllable of people, riddle. Holder

Vowel makes the two vowels meet without an elision. Brown

VOWELOW, n. f. [vow and yellow.] One bound by the same vow.

Who are the votaries,

That are vowelous with this virtuous king? Shakespeare

VOYAGE, n. f. [vojage, French.]

1. A travel by sea.

Upon forward gan his vojage make,

With his black palmer, that him guided still. Spenser

Our ships went sundry vojages, as well to the pillars of Hercules, as to other parts in the Atlantic and Mediterranean seas. Bacon

This great man acted like an able pilot in a long vojage; contented to sit in the cabin when the winds were alloyed, but ready to resume the helm when the storm abated. For

2. Course; attempt; undertaking. A low phrase.

If he should intend his vojage towards my wife, I would turn her back to him, and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it be on my head. Shakespeare

If you make your vojage upon her, and prevail,

I am no further your enemy. Shakespeare

3. The practice of travelling.

All nations have interknowledge of one another,

by vojage into foreign parts, or strangers that come to them. Bacon

To VOYAGE, v. n. [vojager, Fr. from the noun.] To travel by sea.

For, voyaging to learn the dreadful art,

To hunt with deadly drugs the barbed dart;

His restless voyage impart the baneful trust. Pope

To VOYAGE, v. a. To travel; to pass over.

I with pain

Voyag'd th' unrelax'd, with unbounded deep

Of horrible confusion. Milton

VOYAGEUR, n. f. [vojageur, French, from vojage.] One who travels by sea.

Didst not in thy constant travelling

To do as other voyagers, and make

Some turns into less creeks, and wisely take

Fresh water at the Heliconian spring. Deane

How comfortable this is, voyagers can best tell. Cheney

Deny your voyagers, ye deny in vain,

A private voyager I pass the main. Pope

UP, adv. [up Sax. op, Dutch and Danish.]

1. Aloft; on high; not down.

From those two brethren, admire the wonderful changes of worldly things; now up, now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty

than a stage play. Knotts

Hither his course he bends, but up or down,

By center, or eccentric, hard to tell, Milton

Or longitude.

2. Out of bed; in a state of being risen from rest.

Helen was not up, was she? Shakespeare

His chamber being commonly fix'd with letters, when he was up, he gave his legs, arms, and breast to his servants to dress him, his eyes to his letters, and ears to petitioners. Bacon

3. In the state of being risen from a seat.

Upon his first rising, a general whisper ran among the country people, that the Roger was up. Addison

4. From a state of decumbiture or concealment.

5. In a state of being built.

Up with my tent, here will I lie to-night;

But where to morrow?—well, all's one for that. Shakespeare

6. Above the horizon.

As soon as the sun is up, set upon the city. Judges

Now morn with rosy light had streak'd the sky,

Up rose the sun, and up rose Emily;

Adapted her early steps to Cynthia's face. Dryden

7. To a state of proficiency.

Till we have wrought ourselves up into this degree of christian indifference, we are in bondage. Atterbury

8. In a state of exaltation.

Those that were up themselves kept others low;

Those that were low the melior held others hard,

Ne suffer'd them to rise, or greater grow. Spenser

Henry the fifth is crown'd, up, vanity!

Down, royal state! all you large councillors, hence! Shakespeare

9. In a state of climbing.

Straight the rumour flew

Up to the city; which heard, up they drew

By dices and breaks. Chapman

10. In a state of insurrection.

The gentle archbishop of York is up

With well appointed powers. Shakespeare

Rebels there are up,

And put the English men into the sword. Shakespeare

Thou hast bid me, my foul's up in arms,

And many each part about me. Dryden

11. In a state of being increased, or raised.

Great and powerful as the Nile is raised in little brooks by a sudden rain; the year quickly up, and in the commencement be poured unexpectedly in upon us, it overflows us. Dryden

12. From a remote place, coming to any person or place.

As a boat was whetting his teeth, up comes a fox to him. Farquhar

13. Into order; as, he drew up his regiment.

14. From younger to elder years.

I am ready to die from my youth up. Psalms

15. Up and down. Disperately; here and there.

Abundance of them are seen scattered up and down like many little islands when the tide is low. Addison

16. Up and down. Backward and forward.

Our debate is, in this present controversy, not to be carried up and down with the waves of uncertainty arguments, but rather positively to lead on the minds of the simpler sort by plain and easy degrees, till the very nature of the thing itself do manifest what is truth. Hobbes

The skipping king he tumbled up and down,

With shallow jesters. Shakespeare

Up and down he traverses his ground;

Now wants to tell how blow now strikes again;

The mumbly shifts a thorn, then wounds a wound;

Now back he gives, then rubs the man. Daniel

Thou art I death

Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen

Will silently the humors air. Milton

On this windy sea of land, the fond

Walk'd up and down alone, bent on his prey. Milton

What a notable life dost thou lead, says a dog to a lion, to run having up and down thus in words. Le Franc

She has not the wanders up and down.

Through all her face, and lights up every charm. Addison 17. Up to. To an equal height with.

I think was quarrell'd with the eye of an enterprising thief, who took on the chin in water, that fled from his lips when ever he attempted to drink it. Addison

18. Up to. Adequately to.

The whole nation of the country lived up to the religion of their country, when they law nothing inappropriate to morality. Addison

The eyes determined to live up to the long rule

by which they were judge of all lives to work. Le Franc

We must not only mortify all the passions that seduce us, but we must learn to do well and not up to the positive precepts of our duty. Boissier

19. Up with. A phrase that signifies the act of raising any thing to give a blow.

She, quick and proud, and who in P's dispute,

Up with her fist, and took him on the face.

Another came, quoth she, become more wild;

Thus P's did kiss her hand with little grace. Shelton

20. It is added to verbs implying some accumulation, or increase.

If we could number up those prodigious wars that terv'd in every part of the Continent of old

Rome, they would amount to more than can be found in any of the parts of Europe of the same extent. Addison

UP, interj.

1. A word exhorting to rise from bed.

Up, up! comes gladdening his break of day,

Go drive the darkness and the day away. Pope

2. A word of exhortation, exciting or rouling to action.

U P B

Up there, Methusalem, the mournful muse of mine;
Such come of mourning never hadit done;
Up, grails plods - and up, my mortal time;
Matter of mirth now dilt thou have no more.

Put up, and enter now into full bliss
Up, up, for lo our's take, twelve glorious wit
You,

And long to call you chert
Up, prep. From a lower to a higher part;
not down.

In going up a hill, the faces will be most weary;
In going down, the thighs - for that in lifting the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body bears it most upon the knees, and in going down, upon the thighs.

To UPRAR, v. a. pret. upbore; part. pass.
upborn. [up and bear.]

1. To sustain aloft; to support in elevation.
Upborn with indelible wings
Rang'd in a line the ready vaders stand,
Scent from the coach, and vanth over the band;
Scent as on wings of wind upbore the fly,
And drifts of thing dust involve the fly.

2. To raise aloft.
Thus with pray'r,
Or one short flight of human breath, upborn
Even to the tent of God.

A monstrous wave upbore
The chief, and dash'd him on the craggy shore.

3. To support from falling.
Vital powers, gear way both weak and wnn,
For want of too land sleep, which two upbore,
Falsely wayward, the hard bit of man.

To UPRAR, v. a. [up and bear in, up-geared in, Saxon.]

1. To charge contemptuously with any thing disgraceful. It has commonly with, sometimes of, before the thing imputed;
sometimes it has only an accusative of the thing, as in Milton, and sometimes the person without the thing, or the thing without the person.

The fathers, when they were upbraid'd with that defect, comforted themselves with the meditation of God's most glorious nature, who did not therefore the less accept of their hearty affection.

It focus'd in me
But as an honour stretch'd with boundless hand,
And I had many living to upbraid
My gain of it by their afflictions,
Which daily grew to quarrel

Upbraid us with our duties,
Vain man! how long wilt thou thy God upbraid?

And, like the roaring of a furious wind,
Thus vent the vile distemper of thy mind.

How cunningly the forecels displays
Her own transfer thence, to upbraid me mine.

'Tis a general complaint against you, and I must upbraid you with it, that, because you need no water, you will not.

You may the world of more defects upbraid,
That other works by nature are unmade,
That the did never at her own expense
A palace rear

2. To object as matter of reproach, with to be fore the person.

Those that have been bred together, are apt to envy their equals when raised; for upbraid upbraid unto them their own fortunes, and pointeth at them.

Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, grudge, or upbraid to them those final remains of nitrous pity, which the rapacity of some ages has once left.

May they not justly to our chimes upbraid,
Shortness of night, and penury of shade.

3. To urge with reproach.
I have too long born
Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffs.

He that knowingly commits an ill, has the upbraidings of his own conscience.

U P H

4. To reproach on account of a benefit received from the reproacher.

Every hour
He flings into one gross crime or other;
His knights grow riotous, and he himself upbraideth us.

On every truth.
If any lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth liberally, and upbraideth not.

5. To bring reproach upon; to show faults by being in a state of comparison.
Ah, my son, how evil sits it me to have such a son! and how much doth thy kindnets upbraid my wicked deeds!

The counsel which I cannot take,
Instead of healing, but upbraideth my weakness.

6. To treat with contempt. Not in use.
There also was that mighty monarch laid,
Low under all, yet above all in pride;
That name of native he did foul upbraid,
And would, as Amnon's son, be magnify'd.

UPRARDER, n. f. [from upbraid.] One that reproaches.

UPRARDINGLY, adv. By way of reproach.

The time was when men would learn and study good things, not envy those that had them. Then men were had in price for learning; now letters only make men vile. He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nickname.

To UPRARDING, v. a. [A word formed from upbraid by Spenser, for the sake of a rhyming termination.] To shame.

Vile knight,
That knights and knighthood dost with shame
upbraid.

And the will th' ensample of thy childish might,
Whilfully, weak, old women thus to fight.

UPRARGTER, n. f. [A word formed from upbraid by Spenser, for the sake of a rhyming termination.] To shame.

Vile knight,
That knights and knighthood dost with shame
upbraid.

Vile knight,
That knights and knighthood dost with shame
upbraid.

Yet, as immortal, in our uphill chase
We press our fortune with unslacken'd pace. Young.
To UPRARDING, v. a. [up and board.] To treasure; to store; to accumulate in private places.

Heaps of huge words uphoarded hideously
With horrid found, though having little sense,
They think to be chief praise of poetry;

And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marr'd the face of goodly poeie,
And made a monster of their fantasia.

It thou hast uphoarded in thy life
Extorted treasure in the womb of earth,
Speak on it.

To UPRARDING, v. a. preter. upheld; part.
pass. upheld, and upholden. [up and hold.]

1. To lift on high.
The mournful train with groans, and hands upheld,

Befought his pity.
2. To support; to sustain; to keep from falling.

While life upholds this arm,
This arm upholds the house of Lancaster.

This great man found no means to continue and uphold his ill purchased greatness, but by rejecting the English law, and assuming in lieu thereof, the barbarous customs of the Irish.

Poetry and painting were upheld by the strength of imagination.

3. To keep from declension.
There is due from the judge to the advocate for commendation, where commendation has pleaded, for that upholds in the client the reputation of his counsel, and beats down in him the content of his enemy.

4. To support in any state of life.
Many younger brothers have neither lands nor means to uphold themselves.

5. To continue; to keep from defeat.
Divers, although peradventure not willing to be yoked with eld rills, yet were contented to uphold opposition against boldness, not without greater hurt to the count of their whole proceedings.

6. To keep from being lost.
In spite of spite, alone upholds the day.

7. To continue without failing.
A deaf person, by observing the motions of another man's mouth, knows what he says, and upholds a current communication of discourse with him.

8. To continue in being.
As Nebuchodonosor liveth, who hath sent thee for the upholding of every living thing.

A due proportion is held between the parts, as well in the natural body of man, as the body politic of the state, for the upholding of the whole.

UPHOLDER, n. f. [from uphold.]

1. A supporter.
Suppose then Atlas ne'er so wife:
Yet when the weight of knigdom lies
Too long upon his single shoulders,
Sink down he must, or find upholders.

2. A sustainer in being.
The knowledge thereof is for many manhoods to the knowledge and admiration of the infinite wdom of the creator and upholder of them.

3. An undertaker; one who provides for funerals.
The company of upholders have a right upon the bodies of the subjects.

Where the brain knocker wrapt in flannel band
Forbids the thunder of the footman's hand;
Th' upholder, rictal harpinger of death,
Waits with impatience for the dying breath.

UPHOLDERER, n. f. [a corruption of up-holder.] One who furnishes houses; one who fits up apartments with beds and furniture.

It a corner of the hanging wants a single nail,
Send for the upholsterer. Swift
More wax as yet, you fashion him with ease.
Your barber, cook, upholsterer. Pope
UPLAND, n. s. [up and land.] Higher ground.

Men at first, after the flood, lived in the uplands and tops of the mountains, and by degrees sunk into the plains. Burnet

UPLAND, adj.

1. Higher in situation.

There in Cornwall do no more, by nature than others, live where by choice, conceive themselves an enlarged society from the upland dwellers, and carry an emulation against them. Carew

Sometimes with leisure delight
The upland hamlets will invite. Milton

2. Rude; savage. This is the meaning in Chapman; probably because the up-landers, having less commerce, were less civilized.

And long'd to see this heap of fortune,
That to illustrate was, and upland rude,
That lawless dame nor humane he had learn'd

Chapman
UPPLANDISH, adj. [from upland.] Mountainous, inhabiting mountains.

Londoners, uplandish, and mere wild,
Slave to his pride, and all his nerves being naturally congl'd

Of eminent strength, stalks out and preys upon a filly sheep. Chapman

TO UPLAY, v. a. [up and lay.] To board, to lay up.

We are but farmers of ourselves; yet may,
If we can stock ourselves and thrive, get in Much, much good treasure for the great rent day.

Douglas
TO UPLIFT, v. a. [up and lift.] To raise aloft.

Mechanick fl ves, mischievousness.

If we would neither impose upon ourselves, nor others, we must lay aside that fallacious method of confining by the lump. Burnet
That is not a fault inseparable from suits, but is the sin of the managers: it is not naturally upon the thing, but only upon the contingent circumstances and manner of doing. Kettlewell

7. In consequence of. Now little in use.
Let me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever. Shakespeare
Then the princes of Germany had but a due fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension of the ambitious designs of that nation. Racine
I wish it may not be concluded, left upon the cond cogitations, there should be cause to alter. Racine These forces took hold of divers, in some upon dilettante, in some upon ambition, in some upon levity, and desire of change, and in some few upon confidence and belief, but in most upon stupidity; and in divers out of dependence upon some of the better sort, who did in secret favour their wants.

Racine
He made a great difference between people that did rebel upon wantonness, and them that did rebel upon want. Bacon
Upon pity they were taken away, upon ignorance
they are again demand'd. Hume Promises can be of no force, unless they be believed to be conditional, and unless that duty prop'd to be enforced by them, be acknowledged to be part of that condition, upon performance of which those promises do, and upon the neglect of which those promises shall not be long to any. Hammond
The king had no kindness for him upon an old account, as remembering the part he had acted against the earl of Strafford. Clarendon Though his offers itself in never to pleasing and seizes or possesses that to which he has no right. It is generally used of one who excludes the right heir from the throne.

Ever since he hath continued his first usurped power, and now exacteth upon all men what he list: so that now to induce or expel an usurper, should be no unjust enterprise, but a restitution of ancient right unto the crown. Spenser.

Richard duke of York
Was rightful heir unto the English crown;
And that your majesty was an usurper. Shakespeare.

But this usurper his encroachment proud Stays not on man; to God his tow'r intends Siege and defiance. Milton.

the greatest power; the highest degree;
the greatest effort.

What miseries,
Shall be the general's fault, though he perform
To th' utmost of a man. Shakespeare.

I will be free,
Even to the utmost as I please in words. Shakespeare.

Such a conscience, as has employed the utmost of its ability to give itself the best information, and clearest knowledge of its duty, that it can, is a rational ground for a man to build such an hope upon. South.

Try your fortune.—
—I have to the utmost. Dost thou think me desperate? Dryden.

Without just cause?
A man, having carefully enquired into all the grounds of probability and unlikelihood, and done his utmost to inform himself in all particulars, may come to acknowledge on which side the probability rests. Locke.

The enemy thinks of raising three score thousand men: let us perform our utmost, and we shall overcome them with our multitudes. Addison.

UTTER. adj. [utcep, Saxon.]

1. Situate on the outside, or remote from the centre.

In my sight
Through utter and through middle darkness borne,
I long of chaos and eternal night. Milton.

1. Placed beyond any compass; out of any place.

Pursue these sons of darkness; drive them out
From all heav'n's bounds into the utter deep Milton.

Extreme; excessive; utmost. This seems to be Milton's meaning here, though the former sense may serve.

Such place eternal justice had prepar'd
For those rebellious, here their prison ordain'd
In utter darkness, and their portion set
As far remov'd from God, and light of heav'n,
As from the center twice to th' utmost pole Milton.

Complete; total.

The parliament thought the utter taking it away necessary for the preservation of the kingdom Clarendon.

Peremptory.

There could not be any other estimate made of his loss, than by the utter refusal of the auxiliary regiments of London and Kent to march farther Clarendon.

Perfect; mere.

They feel fewer corporal pains, and are utter angers to all those anxious thoughts which disturb mankind. Atterbury.

UTTER. v. a. [from the adjective;
to make publick, or let out; palam facere.]

1. To speak; to pronounce; to express.

Men spoke not with the instruments of writing, neither writ with the instruments of speech, and yet things recorded with the one, and uttered with the other, may be preached well enough with both. Hooker.

These very words I've heard him utter. Shakspeare.

There's more gold: but, sirrah,
We say the dead are well. Bring it to that,
The gold I give thee will I melt, and pour Down thy ill-uttering throat. Shakspeare.

Shall not they teach thee and tell thee, and utter words but of their heart? Job.

Who knows but his poor, bleeding heart,
Amidst its agonies, remember'd Marcia,
And the last words he utter'd call'd me cruel! Addison.

2. To disclose; to discover; to publish.

When do partial and sinister affections more utter the infolies, than when an election is committed to many. Whigitt.

Were it folly to be modest in uttering what is known to all the world? Raleigh.

I cannot my words should not reach your ears;
but what I utter'd was most true. Dryden.

the name of Newfoundland fish. Abbot.

The Devonshire and Somersetshire graubers feed yearly great droves of cattle in the north quarter of Cornwall, and utter them at home. Carew.

4. To disperse; to emit at large.

To preserve us from ruin, the whole kingdom should continue in a firm resolution never to reverse or utter this fatal coin. Swift.

UTTERABLE. adj. [from utter.] Expressible;
such as may be uttered.

UTTERANCE. n. f. [from utter.]

1. Pronunciation; manner of speaking.

He with utterance grave, and countenance sad,
Point to point discours'd his voyage. Spenser.

Many a man thinks admirably well, who has a poor utterance; while others have a charming manner of speech, but their thoughts are trifling. Watts.

V U L

2. [outrance, French.] Extremity; terms of extreme hostility. Out of use.

Of him I gather'd honour;
Which he to seek of me again perforce,
Behoves me keep at utterance. Shakspeare.

Come, fate, into the list,
And champion me to th' utterance. Shakspeare.

3. Vocal expression; emission from the mouth.

Till Adam, though no less than Eve abash'd,
At length gave utterance to these words constrain'd. Milton.

Speaking is a sensible expression of the notions of the mind, by several intonations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by consent several determinate significances. Holder.

There have been some inventions, which have been able for the utterance of articulate sounds, as the speaking of certain words. Withins.

UTTERER. n. f. [from utter.]

1. One who pronounces.

2. A divulger; a discloser.

pletely; perfectly. For the most part in an ill sense.

God, whose property is to shew his mercies, then greatly, when they are nearest to be utterly despaired. Hooker.

Arguments taken from the authority of men, may not only to far truth as hath been declared, but further also, be of some force in human sciences; which force, be it never so small, doth shew that they are not utterly naught. Hooker.

All your interest in those territories
Is utterly bereft you; all is lost. Shakspeare.

He was so utterly tired with an employment so contrary to his humour, that he did not consider the means that would lead him out of it. Clarendon.

There is no where any nation so utterly lost to all things of law and morality, as not to believe the existence of God. Withins.

While in the flesh, we cannot be utterly intelligible of the afflictions that befall us. Atterbury.

UTTERMOST. adj. [from utter.] sculous power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it, called the pupil. Ray.

VULCANO. n. f. [Italian.] A burning mountain: it is commonly written after the Italian, vulcano.

Earth calmed fires off into the air; the ashes of burning mountains, in vulcanos, will be carried to great distances. Arbuthnot.

VULGAR. adj. [vulgaire, French; vulgaris,
Latin.]

1. Plebeian; suited to the common people; practised among the common people.

Men who have passed all their time in low and vulgar life, cannot have a suitable idea of the feveral beauties and blemishes in the actions of great men. Addison.

2. Vernacular; national.

It might be more useful to the English reader, who was to be his immediate care, to write in our vulgar language. Pell.

V U L

3. Mean; low; being of the common rate.

It requiring too great a sagacity for vulgar minds, to draw the line between virtue and vice, no wonder if most men attempt not a laborious scrutiny into things themselves, but only take names and words, and so rest in them. South.

Now wasting years my former strength confound,
And added woes have bow'd me to the ground;
Yet by the rubble you may guess the grain,
And mark the ruins of no vulgar man. Browne.

4. Publick; commonly bruited.

Do you hear aught of a battle toward? — —Moltire, and vulgar, every one hears that. Shakspeare.

VULGAR. n. f. [vulgaire, Fr.] The common people.

I'll about;
Drive away the vulgar from the streets. Shakspeare.

Those men, and their adherents, were then looked upon by the distinguished vulgar as greater protectors of their laws and liberties than myself. King Charles.

The most considering and wisest men, in all ages and nations, have constantly differed from the vulgar in their thought. Withins.

The vulgar imagine the pretender to have been a child imposed upon the nation by the fraudulent zeal of his parents, and their bigotted councillors. Swift.

VULGARISM. n. f. [from vulgar.] Grovnels; meannells; vulgarity.

The great events of Greek and Roman fable and history, which early education, and the usual course of reading, have made familiar and interesting to all Europe, without being degraded by the vulgarity of ordinary life in any country. Reynolds.

VULGARITY. n. f. [from vulgar.]

1. Meannells; state of the lowest people.

Although their condition may place them many degrees above the multitude, yet are they still within the line of vulgarity and democratical enemies to truth. Brown.

True it is, and I hope I shall not offend their vulgarity if I say, they are daily mocked into error by devils. Brown.

2. Mean or grov mode.

Is the grandiloquence of Persius, and the sublimity of Juvenal, to be circumscribed with the meannells of words, and vulgarity of expression? Duden.

VULGARLY. adv. [from vulgar.] Commonly; in the ordinary manner; among the common people.

If thou art thus uxoriously inclin'd To bear thy bondage with a willing mind, Prepare thy neck.

Dryden.

UXORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from uxorius.] Connubial dotage; fond submission to a wife.

W.

W A D

W is a letter of which the form is not to be found in the alphabets of the learned languages; though it is not improbable that by our w is expressed the sound of the Roman v, and the Eolick f. Both the form and sound are excluded from the languages derived from the Latin. W is sometimes improperly used in diphthongs as a vowel for u; view, threw: the sound of w consonant, if it be a consonant, is uniform.

To WA'DDLE. v. n. [a low barbarous word.] To move from side to side; to change direction.

If in your work you find it waddle; that is, that one side of the flat inclines to the right or left hand, with soft blows of an hammer set it to rights, and then screw it hard up.

fancy, and those of nature. Locke.

Here learn the great unreal wants to reign,
Unpleasing truths here mortify the vain. Savage.

Ev'n to brute beasts his righteous care extends,
He feels their dull rings, and their wants befriends. Harte.

2. Deficiency.

This proceeded not from any want of knowledge,
but of judgment. Dryden

One objection to Civita Vecchia is, that the air is not wholesome. this proceeds from want of inhabitants. Addison.

The blood flows through the vessels, by the excess of the force of the heart above the incumbent pressure, which in fat people is excessive; and as want of a due quantity of motion of the fluids increaseth fat, the disease is the cause of itself. Arbuthnot.

Wants of all kinds are made to frame a plan,
One learns to lip, another not to lee. Young.

3. The state of not having.

You shall have no reason to complain of me, for want of a generous disdain of this world. Pope.

riches, as to conceive how others can be in want.
Swift.

5. [want, Saxon.] A mole.

A kind of hare resembling a want in his feet and a cat in his tail. Hephia.

WA'NTON. adj. [This word is derived by Minshew from want one, a man or woman that wants a companion. This etymology, however odd, Junius silently adopts. Skinner, who had more acuteness, cannot forbear to doubt it, but offers nothing better.]

1. Lascivious; libidinous; lecherous; lustful.

Thou art froward by nature, enemy to peace,
Lascivious, wanton, more than well becomes
A man of thy profession. Shakspeare.

Entic'd to do him wanton rites. Milton.

rived.] A broad girth of leather, by which the load is bound upon the horse;
a surcingle.

A panel and wanty, pack-saddle and ped,
With line to fetch litter.
Tusser.

WAPED. adj. [Of this word I know not the original, except that to whape, to shock, or deject, is found in Spenser; from which the meaning may be gathered.] Dejected; crushed by misery.

This makes the waped widow wed again.
Shakspere.

WAPENTAKE. n. f. [from wapen, Saxon, and take; wapentakium, wapentagium, low Latin.]

Wapentake is all one with what we call a hundred: as, upon a meeting for that purpose, they touched each other's weapons, in token of their fidelity and allegiance.
Cowell.

Hundred signifieth a hundred pledges, which were under the command and assurance of their alderman; which, as I suppose, was also called a wapentake; so named of touching the weapon or spear of their alderman, and swearing to follow him faithfully, and serve their prince truly. But others think that a wapentake was ten hundreds, or boroughs.
Spenser.

WAR. n. f. [werre, old Dut. guerre, Fr.]

1. War may be defined the exercise of violence under sovereign command against withstanders; force, authority, and retort, being the essential parts thereof.

Violence, limited by authority, is sufficiently distinguished from robbery, and the like outrages; yet, confining in relation towards others, it necessarily requires a supposition of resistance, whereby the force of war becomes different from the violence inflicted upon slaves or yielding malefactors.
Raleigh.

On, you noblest English,
Whole blood is fetcht from fathers of war proof
Shakspere.

After a denunciation or indication of war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but left at large.
Bacon.

I saw the figure and armour of him that headed the peasants in the war upon Heron, with the several weapons found on his followers.
Addison.

2. The instruments of war, in poetical language.
The god of love inhabits there,
With all his rage, and dread, and grief, and care;
His complement of stores, and total war.
Prior.

3. Forces; army. Poetically.
On th' embattled ranks the waves return,
And overwhelm the war.
Milton.

4. The profession of arms.
Thine almighty word leapt down from heaven, as a fierce man of war into the midst of a land of destruction.
Wisdome.

5. Hostility; state of opposition; act of opposition.
Duncan's horses
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out, Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would Make war with man.
Shakspere.

TO WAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To make war; to be in a state of hostility.
Was this a face
To be expos'd against the warring winds?
Shakspere.

Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within?
Shakspere.

Make peace with God, for you must die, my lord.—

W A R

—Have you that holy feeling in your soul,
To counsel me to make my peace with God;
And are you yet to your own fools in blood,
That you will war with God by murdering me?
Shakspere.

He teacheth my hands to war.
This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy,
that thou by them mightest war a good warfare.
1 Timothy.

He limited his forces, to proceed in aid of the Britons, but in no wise to war upon the French.
Bacon.

We seem ambitious God's whole work 't' undo;
With new diseases on ourselves we war,
And with new physick, a worse engine far.
Donne.

His next design
Was all the Theban race in arms to join,
And war on Thebes.
Dryden.

To the island of Delos, by being reckoned a sacred place, nations warring with one another resorted with their goods, and traded as in a neutral country.
Arbutnot.

TO WAR. v. a. To make war upon. Not used. In Spenser it is probably falsely printed for warraid.

And them long time before great Nimrod was,
That first the world with sword and fire warred.
Spenser.

To them the same was render'd, to the end,
To war the Scot, and borders to defend.
Daniel.

TO WARBLE. v. a. [warben, old Teuto-nick; wervelen, German, to twirl, or turn round.]

1. To quaver any sound.
Fountains, and ye that warble as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise.
Milton.

2. To cause to quaver.
Follow me as I sing,
And touch the warbled string.
Milton.

3. To utter musically.
She can thaw the numbing spell,
If she be right invok'd with warbled song.
Milton.

TO WARBLER. v. n.

1. To be quavered.

Guy.

2. To be uttered melodiously.
A pleasing long plain singing voice requires,
For warbling notes from upward cheering flow.
Southey.

There birds resort, and in their kind thy praise
Among the branches chant in warbling lays.
Watson.

3. To sing.
Creatures that liv'd, and mov'd, and walk'd, or flew;
Birds on the branches warbling; all things snail'd.
Milton.

She warbled in her throat,
And tun'd her voice to many a merry note,
But indistinct.
Dryden.

A bird amid the jayous circle sings
High airs attemper'd to the vocal strings;
Whilst warbling to the varied strain advance
Two sprightly youths to form the bounding dance.
Pope.

WARBLER. n. f. [from warble.] A singer;
a songster.
Hark! on ev'ry bough,
In lulling strains, the feather'd warblers woo.
Pickel.

WARD. A syllable much used as an affix in composition, as acavenward, with tendency to heaven; hitherward, this way; from weard, Saxon: it notes tendency to or from.

Before he could come to the arbour, the faw walking from her ward a man in shepherd's apparel.
Sidney.

TO WARD. v. a. [weardian, Saxon; warden,
Dutch; garder, French.]

1. To guard; to watch.

WAR

He marched forth towards the castle wall,
Those gates he found left shut; no living sight
To ward the same, nor answer comers' call.
Spenser.

To defend; to protect.

Tell him it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers, bid him bury it. Shaksp.
To fence off; to obstruct or turn aside any thing mischievous. It is now used with off, less elegantly.

Not once the baron lift his armed hand
To strike the maid, but gazing on her eyes,
Where lordly Cupid seem'd in arms to stand,
To way to ward or thim her blows he tries.
Fairfax.

Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again.
Daniel.

Toxens amas'd, and with amazement slow,
Or to revenge or ward the coming blow
Too doubting; and, while doubting thus he stood,
Received the steel bath'd in his brother's blood.
Dryden.

The pointed javelin warded off his rage Addison.
The provision of bread for food, clothing to ward off the inclemency of the air, were to be first looked after. Woodward.

It instructs the scholar in the various methods of warding off the force of objections, and of discovering and repelling the subtle tricks of sophisters.
Watts.

WARD. v. n.

To be vigilant; to keep guard.
To act upon the defensive with a weapon.

So redoubling her blows, drove the stranger to a other flint than to ward and go back. Sidney.
Short crooked swords in closer fight they wear,
and on their warding arms light bucklers bear.
Dryden.

WARD. n. f. [from the verb.]

Watch; act of guarding.
Still when the slept he kept both watch and ward.
Spenser.

Sublime on these a tower of steel is rear'd,
and dire Tiphoeus there keeps the ward;
Sirt in her sanguine gown, by night and day
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way.
Dryden.

Garrison; those who are intrusted to keep a place.

By reason of these two forts, though there be but mall wards left in them, there are two good town-now grown, which are the greatest stay of both those two countries. Spenser.

The affixed castles ward their steadfast froids did nightly maintain Spenser.

Guard made by a weapon in fencing.
Thou know'st my old ward; here I lay, and has I bore my point. Shakspere

Come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick. Shaksp.

Now by proof it shall appear,
Whether thy horns are sharper, or my spear.

At this I threw: for want of other ward.
He fitted up his hand his front to guard. Dryden.

Fortress; strong hold.

She dwells securely on the excellency of her honour. Now could I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her from the ward of her purity, her reputation, and thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. Shakspere.

[warda. law Lat.] District of a town.

Throughout the trembling city plac'd a guard,
Dealing an equal share to every ward. Dryden.

Custody; confinement.

That wretched creature, bring deprehened in that impiety, was held in ward. Hooker.

Stop there was his too vehement speech with speed.

And he sent close to ward from whence he stood.
Daniel.

The part of a lock, which, corresponding to the proper key, hinders any other from opening it.

WAR

In the key-hole turns
Th' intricate wards, and every bolt and bar.
Milton.

As there are locks for several purposes, so are these several inventions in the making and contriving their wards, or guards.
The keys, as well as the locks, were fitted ward to ward by the same wisdom. Grew.

8. One in the hands of a guardian.

The king causeth bring up his wards, but befloweth no more of their rents upon them than is useful. Drummond.

You know our father's ward,
The fair Mounia. is your heart at peace?

Is it so guarded that you could not love her? Otway.
Thy Viola's heart was ever thine,
Compell'd to wed before she was my ward Dryden.

When, stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lath the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.

Titles of honour, and privileges, the rich and the great can never deserve, unless they employ them for the protection of these, the true wards and children of God. Sprat.

9. The state of a child under a guardian.

I must attend his majesty's command, to whom
I am now in ward, evermore in subjection. Shaksp.
Lewis the eleventh of France having much abated the greatness and power of the peers, would say, that he had brought the crown out of ward.
Bacon.

10. Guardianship; right over orphans.

It is also inconvenient, in Ireland, that the wards and marriages of gentlemen's children should be in the disposal of any of those lords. Spenser.

WARDEN. n. f. [warden, Dutch.]

1. A keeper; a guardian.

2. A head officer.

The warden of apothecaries hall. Gaith.

3. Warden of the cinque ports.

A magistrate that has the jurisdiction of those havens in the east part of England, commonly called the cinque ports, or five havens, who has there all that jurisdiction which the admiral of England has in places not exempt. The reason why one magistrate should be assigned to these havens seems to be, because, in respect of their situation, they formerly required a more vigilant care than other havens, being in greater danger of invasion by our enemies. Cowell.

4. [pyram valemus, Latin. I know not whence denominated.] A large pear.

Nor must all shoots of pears alike be let,
Crutmanian, Syrian pears, and warden's grent.
May.

Ox-cheek when hot, and warden's bak'd, some cry. Aug.

WARDER. n. f. [from ward.]

1. A keeper; a guard.

Upon those gates with force he fiercely flew,
And rending them in pieces, fellly flew
Those warders strange, and all that else he met.
Spenser.

Where be these warders, that they wait not here?
Open the gates. Shakspere.

Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,

Though castles topple on their warders heads.
Shakspere.

The warders of the gate but scarce maintain
Th' unequal combat, and resist in vain. Dryden.

2. A truncheon by which an officer of arms forbade fight.

Then, then, when there was nothing could have staid

My father from the breast of Bollingbroke,
O, when the king did throw his warden down,
His own life hung upon the staff he threw. Shaksp.

WARDMORE. n. f. [peapb and mot, or gemot, Sax. wardemotus, low Lat.] A meeting; a court held in each ward or district in London, for the direction of their affairs.

WARDROBE. n. f. [garderobe, Fr. garderobe, low Lat.] A room where clothes are kept.

WAR

The third had of their wardrobe custody,
In which were not rich tires nor garments gay.

The plumes of pride, and wings of vanity,
But cloaths meet to keep keen cold away. Spenser.

I will kill all his coats,
I'll murder all his wardrobe piece by piece,
Until I meet the king. Shakspere.

Behold,
What from his wardrobe her below'd allows,
To deck the wedding day of his unpotted spouse.
Dryden.

It would not be an impertinent design to make a kind of an old Roman wardrobe, where you should see togas and tunics, the chlamys and tra-bea, and all the different veils and ornaments so often mentioned in the Greek and Roman authors.
Addison.

WARDSHIP. n. f. [from ward.]

1. Guardianship.

By reason of the tenures in chief revived, the fums for respect homage he encreased, and the profits of wardships cannot but be much advanced. Bacon.

2. Pupillage; state of being under ward.

The houses freed out their ivory, and redeemed themselves from the wardship of tumults King Charles.

WARE. The preterit of wear, more frequently wore.

A custom man ware no cloaths. Take.

WARE. adj. [for this we commonly lay aware.]

1. Being in expectation of; being provided against.

The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not ware of him. Matthew.

2. Cautious; wary.

What man so wide, what earthly wit so ware,
As to detect the crafty cunning to him
By which deceit doth mask in vizor fair. Spenser.

Ware. v. n. To take heed of; to beware.

A shuffed, fullen, and uncertain light
That dances through the clouds, and flits again,
Then ware a rising tempest on the main. Dryden.

WARE. n. f. [papi, Sax. waere, Dutch; wara, Swedish.] Commonly something to be sold.

Let us, like merchants, shew our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they'll sell. Shakspere.

If the people bring ware or any victuals to sell,
that we would not buy it. Nichemiah.

I know thou whole art but a shop
Of toys and trifles, traps and snares,
To take the weak, and make them stop;
Yet not thou faster than thy wares. Ben Jonson.

Why should any black thy love impair?
Let the dark shop commend the ware. Cleveland.

London, that vents of fulse ware so much store,
In no ware deceives us more. Cowley.

He turns himself to other wares which he finds your markets take off. Locke.

WAREFUL. adj. [ware and full.] Cautious; timorously prudent.

WAREFULNESS. n. f. [from wareful.] Cautiousness. Obsolete.

With pretence from Strephon her to guard,
He met her full; but full of warefulness. Sidney.

WAREHOUSE. n. f. [ware and house.] A storehouse of merchandise.

His understanding is only the warehouse of othemen's lumber, I mean false and unconvincing rea-sonings, rather than a repository of truth for his own use. Locke.

She had never more ships at sea, greater quantities of merchandise in her warehouses, than at present.
Addison.

She the big warehouse built,
Rain'd the strong crane. Thomson.

WARELESS. adj. [from ware.] Uncau-tious; unwary. Spenser.

WARELY. adv. [from ware.] Warily;
cautiously; timorously.

W A R

They bound him hand and foot with iron chains,
And with continual watch did sorely keep.

WARFARE, n. f. [war and fare.] Military service; military life; state of contest and solicitude.

In the wilderness

He shall first lay down the rudiments
Of his great warfare, ere I send him forth
To conquer sin and death.

Paul hath been your warfare, and of God
Accepted, fearless in his righteous cause.
Tully, when he read the Factus, was thinking on the war, which was his field of battle: the knowledge of warfare is thrown away on a general who does not make use of what he knows.

The state of Christians, even when they are not actually persecuted, is a perpetual state of warfare and voluntary sufferings.

The scripture has directed us to refer their misfortunes in our Christian warfare to the power of three enemies.

WARFARE, v. n. [from the noun.]
To lead a military life.

That was the only amulet, in that credulous war-faring age, to elude dangers in battles.

WARFABLE, adj. [war, and habile, from habilis, Lat. or able.] Military; fit for war.

The weary Britons, whose warlike youth
Was by Maximilian lately led away,
With wretched miseries and woful ruth,
Were to those Pagans made an open prey.

WARILY, adv. [from wary.] Cautiously; with timorous prudence; with wise forethought.

The change thereof unto a courteous spirit
Commended was, who thereby did attend,
And warily awaited day and night,
From other covetous hands it to defend.

The change of laws, especially concerning matters of religion, must be warily proceeded in.

So rich a prize could not to warily be faced, but that Portugals, French, English, and now of late the Low Country men, have had in their own barns part of the Spaniards harvest.

They searched diligently, and concluded warily.

It will concern a man to treat conference warily and warily, by full observing what it commands, but especially what it forbids.

WARINESS, n. f. [from wary.] Caution; prudent forethought; timorous scrupulousness.

For your own conscience he gives innocence,
But for your fame a discreet wariness.

It will deserve our special care and wariness to deliver our thoughts in this manner.

To determine what are little things in religion, great wariness is to be used.

The path was so very slippery, the shade to exceeding gloomy, and the whole wood to full of echoes, that they were forced to march with the greatest wariness, circumspection, and silence.

Most men have so much of all nature, or of all weakness, as not to foorth the vanity of the ambitious man.

I look upon it to be a most clear truth, and expressed it with more wariness and reserve than was necessary.

WAR, n. f. [anciently used for work;
whence bulwark.] Building.

Thou findest fault where any's to be found,
And buldest strong work upon a weak ground.

WARLIKE, adj. [war and like.]
1. Fit for war; disposed to war.

She doing so strange, and yet so well succeeding temper made her people by peace warlike.

Old Sward with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at appoint, was setting forth.

When a warlike state grows soft and effeminate,
they may be sure of a war.

O imprudent Gauls,
Relying on false hopes, thus to incense
The warlike English.

W A R

2. Military; relating to war.

The great arch-angel from his warlike toil Success'd.

WARLING, n. f. [from war.] This word is I believe only found in the following adage, and seems to mean, one often quarrelled with.

Better be an old man's darling than a young man's warling.

WARLOCK, n. f. [wardlook, Inlandick,
a charm; perlog, Saxon, an evil spirit. This etymology was communicated by Mr. Hye.] A male witch; a wizard.

Warlock in Scotland is applied to a man whom the vulgar suppose to be con-verlant with spirits, as a woman who carries on the same commerce is called a witch: he is supposed to have the invul-nerable quality which Dryden mentions, who did not understand the word.

He was no warlock, as the Scots commonly call such men, who they say are iron free or lead free.

WARM, adj. [warm, Gothick; peapm,
Saxon; warm, Dutch.]

1. Not cold, though not hot; heated to a small degree.

He stretched himself upon the child, and the flesh of the child waxed warm.

Mam o'cean flow'd not idle, but with warm
Prolifick humour foaming all her globe.

We envy not the warmer clime that lies
In ten degrees of more indulgent skies.

2. Zealous; ardent.

I never thought myself so warm in any party's cause as to deceive their money.

Each warm with springs mutual from the heart
Scaliger in his poetries is very warm against it.

3. Habitually passionate; ardent; keen.

4. Violent; furious; vehement.

Welcome day-light; we shall have warm work on't.

The Moor will rage
His utmost forces on his next assault,
To win a queen and kingdom.

5. Busy in action; heated with action.

I hate the lug'ring humours to attend,
Death all at once would be a nobler end;
Fate is unkind methinks a general
Should warm, and at the head of armies fall.

6. Fanciful; enthusiastic.

It there be a tober and a wise man, what difference will there be between his knowledge and that of the most extravagant fancy in the world? It there be any difference between them, the advantage will be on the warm-headed man's side, as having the more ideas, and the more lively.

7. Vigorous; sprightly.

Now warm in youth, now with'ring in thy bloom,
Lost in a convent's solitary gloom.

TO WARM, v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To free from cold; to heat in a gentle degree.

It shall be for a man to burn, for he shall take thereof and warm himself.

Shot down direct his fervid rays, to warm
Earth's inmost womb.

These soft fires, with kindly heat
Of various influence, foment and warm.

2. To heat mentally; to make vehement.

The action of Homer being more full of vigour than that of Virgil, is more pleasing to the reader;
one warms you by degrees, the other sets you on fire
all at once, and never intermits his heat.

TO WARM, v. n. To grow less cold.

These shall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to sit before it.

W A R

WARWINGPAN, n. f. [warm and pan.]
A covered bras pan for warming a bed
by means of hot coals.

WARWINGSTONE, n. f. [warm and stone.]
To stones add the warming stone, digged in Cornwall, which being well heated at the fire retains warmth a great while, and hath been found to give ease in the internal hæmorrhoids.

WARMLY, adv. [from warm.]
1. With gentle heat.

There the warming sun first warmly smote
The open field.

2. Eagerly; ardently.

Now I have two right honest wives;
One to Atides I will send,
And Cother to my Trojan friend;
Each prince shall thus with honour have
What both so warmly seem to crave.

The ancients expect you should do them right in the account you intend to write of their characters.
I hope you think more warmly than ever of that deign.

WARMLY, n. f. [from warm.]
1. Gentle heat.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my goal,
from the loathed warmth whereto deliver me.

Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun encreasing than the hot herbs have, as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot.

He vital virtue infus'd, and vital warmth,
Throughout the fluid masts,

Here kindly warmth their mounting juice ter-ments,

The nobler tastes, and more exalted scents.

2. Zeal; passion; fervour of mind.

What warmth is there in your affection toward,
any of these princely tutors that are already come?

Our duties towards God and man we should perform with that unteigned integrity which belongs to Christian piety; with that temper and sobriety which becomes Christian produce and charity; with that warmth and affection which agrees with Christian zeal.

Your opinion, that it is entirely to be neglected, would have been my own, had it been my own case; but I felt more warmth here than I did when first I saw his book against myself.

The best patriots, by tiring with what warmth and zeal the smallest corruptions are defended, have been wearied into silence.

3. Fancifulness; enthusiasm.

The same warmth of head disposes men to both.

TO WARN, v. a. [pannian, Saxon; uarnen,
Dutch; uarna, Swedish; varna,
Inlandick.]

1. To caution against any fault or danger; to give previous notice of ill.

What, dost thou scorn me for my gentle counsel?
And sooth the devil that I warn thee from?

The hand can hardly lift up itself high enough to strike, but it must be seen, so that it warns while it threatens; but a false insidious tongue may whisper a lie so close and low, that though you have ears to hear, yet you shall not hear.

Juturna warns the Dauman chief
Of Lausus' danger, urging swift relief.

He had chidden the rebellious winds for obeying the command of their usurping master; he had warned them from the seas; he had beaten down the billows.

If we consider the mistakes in men's disputes and notions, how great a part is owing to words, and their uncertain or mistaken significations; thus we are the more carefully to be warned of, because the arts of improving it have been made the business of men's study.

The father, whilst he warn'd his erring son
The sad examples which he ought to shun.

When first young Maro sung of kings and wars,
Ere warning Phœbus touch'd his trembling ears,
Perhaps he seem'd above the critic's law,
And but from nature's fountains scorn'd to draw.

Pope

2. To admonish of any duty to be performed, or practice or place to be avoided or forsaken.

Cornelius was warned from God, by an holy angel, to fend for thee.

Acts

3. To inform previously of good or bad.

He wonders to what end you have assembled
Such troops of citizens to come to him,
His grace not being warn'd thereof before.

Shakespeare

He charg'd the soldiers, with preventing cure
Their flags to follow, and their arms prepare,
Warn'd of th' ensuing fight, and bade 'em hope the war.

Dryden

Man, who knows not hearts, should make examples,

Which like a warning-piece must be shot off,
To fright the rest from crime.

Dryden

4. Milton put no preposition before the thing.

Our first parents had been warn'd
The coming of their secret foe, and scap'd
His mortal snare.

Paradise Lost

WAR'NING, n. f. [from warn.]

1. Caution against faults or dangers; previous notice of ill.

I will thank the Lord for giving me warning in the night.

Psalm

He, groaning from the bottom of his breast,
This warning in these mournful words express'd.

Dryden

Here wretched Phlegias warns the world with cries,
Could warning make the world more just or wise.

Dryden

You have surer warning than others who are Unexpectedly cut off, and to have a better opportunity, as well as greater engagements, to provide for your latter end.

Wake

A true and plain relation of my misfortunes may be of use and warning to credulous minds, never to put too much trust in deceitful men.

Sage

2. Previous notice; in a sense indifferent.

Suppose he have a more solitary death, that at some date give him warning of its approach, yet perhaps he will not understand that warning, but will still flatter himself, as very often sick people do with hopes of life to the last.

Duty of Man

Death called up an old man, and bade him come, the man excus'd himself, that it was a great journey to take upon for short a warning.

I. E. A.

I saw, with some didation, more nonsense than either I or as had a poet, could have cramm'd into it at a month's warning; in which time it was wholly written.

Dryden

WARP, n. f. [pearp, Sax. warp, Dutch.]

That order of thread in a thing woven that crosses the woof.

The placing of the tangle parts in length or transverse, as it is in the warp and the woof of texture, more inward or more outward.

Bacon

To WARP, v. n. [pearp, Saxon; werpen, Dutch, to throw; whence we sometimes say, the work casts.]

1. To change from the true situation by untellable motion; to change the position of one part to another.

This fellow will but join you together as they join waincot, then one of you will prove a shrank panel, and, like green timber, warp.

Shakespeare

They clump one piece of wood to the end of another piece, to keep it from casting or warping.

Moxon

2. To lose its proper course or direction.

There's our commission
From which we would not have you warp.

Shakespeare

This is strange! methinks
My favour here begins to warp.

Shakespeare

All attest this doctrine, that the Pope can give away the right of any sovereign, if he shall never to little warp.

Dryden

This we should do as directly as may be, with as little warping and declension towards the creature as is possible.

Nares

3. To turn. I know not well the meaning here.

The potent rod
Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day
Wav'd round the coast, up call'd a puffy cloud
Of locusts warping on the eastern wind,
That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung
Like night.

Milton

To WARP, v. a.

1. To contract; to thrive.

2. To turn aside from the true direction.

This first avow'd, nor folly warp'd my mind;
Nor the frail texture of the female kind Betray'd my virtue.

Dryden

Not foreign or domestic treachery
Could warp thy soul to their unguilt decree.

Dryden

A great argument of the goodness of his cause, which required in its defender zeal, to a degree of warmth able to warp the sacred rule of the word of God.

Locke

I have no private considerations to warp me in this controversy, since my first entering upon it.

Addison

Not warp'd by passion, aw'd by rumour,
Nor grave through pride, or gay through folly;
An equal mixture of good-humour,
And sensible soft melancholy.

Swift

A constant watchfulness against all those prejudices that might warp the judgment aside from truth.

Watts

Aristotle's moral, rhetorical, and political writings, in which his excellent judgment is very little warp'd by logical subtleties, are far the most useful part of his philosophy.

Beattie

3. It is used by Shakespeare to express the effect of fiolt.

Fire, freeze thou bitter sky!

Thou dost not bite to nigh

As benefits forgot

Though thou the waters warp,

Thy sting is not so sharp

As friends remember'd not.

As you like it.

To WAR'RANT, v. n. [garantir, Fr.]

1. To support or maintain; to attest.

She needed not disdain my service, though never to man, which was warranted by the sacred name of father.

Sidney

He that reacheth unto us the scriptures delivereth all the mysteries of faith, and not any thing among them all more than the mouth of the Lord doth warrant.

Hosker

It is this internal light be conformable to the principles of reason, or to the word of God, which is attested revelation, reason warrants it, and we may safely receive it for true.

Locke

2. To give authority.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness
Be like our warranted quarrel.

Shakespeare

3. To justify.

How can any one warrant himself in the use of those things against such suspicions, but in the truth he has in the common honesty and truth of men in general?

S. A. H.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants and that wisdom guides;
All else is tow'ring frenzy and distraction.

Addison

4. To exempt; to privilege; to secure.

If my coming, whom the said, he feared, as soon as he knew me by the armour, had not warranted her from that near approaching cruelty.

Sidney

These thoughts cannot, in this your loneliness, warrant you from suspicion in others, nor defend you from melancholy in yourself.

Sidney

I'll warrant him from drowning.

Shakespeare

In a place
Less warranted than this, or less secure,
I cannot be, that I should fear to change it.

Milton

5. To declare upon surety.

What a galled neck have we here! Look ye, mine's as smooth as silk, I warrant ye.

L'Estrange

The Moors king

Is safe enough, I warrant him for one.

Dryden

WAR'RANT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A writ conferring some right or authority.

Are you now going to dispatch this deed?

—Wence, my lord, and I use to have the warrant,
That we may be admitted where he is.

Shakespeare

He sent him a warrant for one thousand pounds a year pension for his life.

Clarendon

2. A writ giving the officer of justice the power of caption.

There was a dam'd design, cries one, no doubt;
For warrants are already issued out.

Dryden

3. A secure inviolable grant.

His promise is our plan warrant, that in his name what we ask we shall receive.

Hosker

4. A justificatory commission.

Is this a warrant sufficient for any man's confidence to build such proceedings upon, as have been and are put in use for the establishment of that cause?

Hosker

When at any time they either wilfully break any commandment, or ignorantly mistake it, that is no warrant for us to do to likewise.

Atterwell

5. Attestation.

The place of paradise might be seen unto Moses, and unto the prophets who succeeded him, both which I take for my warrant to guide me in this discovery.

Rowleigh

His warrant does the christian faith defend;

On that relying, all their quarrels end.

Waller

The Jewish religion was yet in possession, and therefore, that this might be enter as not to intrude, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of Omnipotence.

South

6. Right; legality. Obsolete.

I attach the
For an abuser of the world, a practitioner
Of arts inhabited and out of warrant.

Shakespeare

Therefore to honor,
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
Put this away—there's warrant in that theft,
Which fills itself when there's no mercy left.

Shakespeare

WAR'ARRANTABLE, adj. [from warrant.]

Justifiable; defensible.

To purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know.

Bacon

His morals are coarse and short, his employment warrantable, his sleep certain and refreshing.

South

If I can mend my condition by any warrantable industry, the way is fair and open; and that's a privilege every reasonable creature has in his commission.

L'Estrange

WAR'ARRANTABLENESS, n. f. [from warrantable.] Justifiableness.

By the fact, that you may see the nobleness of his desire to you, and the warrantableness of your favour to me.

Sidney

WAR'ARRANTABLY, adv. [from warrantable.] Justifiably.

The faith which God requires is only this, that he will certainly reward all those that believe in him, and obey his commandments; but for the particular application of this faith to ourselves, that deserves no more of our assent, nor can we warrantably have it, than what is founded upon the serious consideration of our own performances.

Wake

WAR'ARRANTER, n. f. [from warrant.]

1. One who gives authority.

2. One who gives security.

WAR'ARRANTISE, n. f. [warrantise, law

Latin; from warrant.] Authority; security.

There's none protector of the realm but I:
Break up the gates, I'll be your warrantise.

Shakespeare

WAR'ARRANTY, n. f. [warrantia, law Latin.]

garantie, garant, Fr.]

1. [In the common law.] A promise made in a deed by one man unto another, for himself and his heirs, to secure him and his heirs against all men, for the enjoying of any thing agreed of between them.

Cowell.

2. Authority; justificatory mandate.

Her obsequies have been so far enlarg'd
As we have warranty: her death was doubtful;
And, but that great command o'erflows the order,
She should in ground unsanctify'd have lodg'd
Till the last trump.

Shakespeare.

In the use of those epithets we have the warranty and consent of all the churches, since they ever had a liturgy.

Taylor.

If they disobey any precept, that is no excuse to us,
nor gives us any warranty, for company's sake,
to disobey likewise.

Kettwell.

3. Security.

Every one cannot distinguish between fine and mixed silver: those who have had the cure and government of politick societies, introduced coinage as a remedy; the stamp was a warranty of the publick, that under such a denomination they should receive a piece of such a weight and fineness.

Locke.

To WARRA'Y. v. a. [from war; or from guerroyer, old Fr.] To make war upon.

A word very elegant and expressive, though obsolete.

But Ebrahe saved both their infancies
With noble deeds, and warra'y'd on Branchild
In Hainault, where yet of his victories Brave monuments remain, which yet that land envys.

Spenser.

Of these a mighty people shortly grew,
And puissant kings, which all the world warra'id,
And to themselves all nations did subdue.

Spenser.

This continual, cruel, civil war,
The which myself against myself do make,
Whilst my weak powers of passions warra'id are,
No skill can stint, nor reason can assuage.

Spenser.

Six years were run since first in martial guise
The Christian lords warra'id the eastern land.

Faulstich.

WARRE. adj. [pærp, Saxon.] Worfe. Obsolete.

They say the world is warre than it wont,
All for her shepherds is beately and blount:
Others saune, but how truly I note,
All for they holden shame of their cote.

Spenser.

WARREN. n. f. [waerande, Dutch; guerrenne, Fr.] A kind of park for rabbits.

I found him here, as melancholy as a lodge in a warren.

Shakespeare.

The coney convenes a whole warren, tells her story,
and advises upon a revenge.

L'Estrange.

Men should let snares in their warrens to catch polecats and foxes.

Dryden.

WARRENER. n. f. [from warren.] The keeper of a warren.

WARRIANGLE. n. f. [lanio.] A hawk.

Ainsworth.

WARRIOUR. n. f. [from war.] A soldier; a military man.

I came from Corinth,
Brought to this town by that most famous warrior,
Duke Menaphon.

Shakespeare.

Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds
In ranks and squadrons, and right form of war,
Which drizzled blood upon the capitol.

Shaksp.

I sing the warrior and his mighty deeds.

Lauderdale.

The warrior horses tied in order fed.
The mute walls relate the warrior's fame,
And Trojan chiefs the Lyrians pity claim.

Dryden.

Camilla led her troops, a warrior dame;
Unbred in spinning, in the loom unskill'd,
She chose the nobler Pallas of the field.

Dryden.

Desire of praise first broke the patriot's rest,
And made a bulwark of the warrior's breast.

Young.

WART. n. f. [pærp, Sax. werte, Dutch.]
1. A cornuous excrescence; a small protuberance on the flesh.

If thou prate of mountains, let them throw
Millions of acres on us, till our ground,

Singeing his pate against the burning sun,
Make Ofs like a wart.

Shakespeare.

In old statues of stone, which have been put in cellars, the feet of them being bound with linden bands, there it appeared the lead did swell, inasmuch as it hanged upon the stone like warts.

Bacon.

Like vile bones lying in saffron'd tin,
Or warts, or wens, it hangs upon her skin.

Donne.

In painting, the warts and moles, adding a likeness to the face, are not to be omitted.

Dryden.

2. A protuberance of trees.

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which he comprehends all preternatural and morbose tumours of plants, doth demonstrate that all such warts, tumours, and excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited or raised up by some venecous liquors, which with their eggs such insects shed; or boring with their terebræ, infuse into the very pulp of such buds.

Ray.

WA'RTWORT. n. f. [wart and wort; verrucaria, Lat.] Spurge.

Ainsworth.

WA'RTY. adj. [from wart.] Grown over with warts.

WA'RWORN. adj. [war and worn.] Worn with war.

Their gesture sad,
Invest in lank lean cheeks and warworn coats,
Presented them unto the gazing moon
So many horrid ghosts.

Shakespeare.

WA'RY. adj. [pærp, Sax.] Cautious; scrupulous; timorously prudent.

He is above, and we upon earth; and therefore it becometh our words to be wary and few.
Leontius, their bishop, although an enemy to the better part, yet wary and subtle, as all the heads of the Ariens faction were, could at no time be plainly heard to use either form.

Hooker.

Good cause he had to hasten thence away;
For on a day his wary dwarf had spy'd,
Where in a dungeon deep huge numbers lay
Of captive wretched thralls, that wailed night and day.

Spenser.

Each thing feigned ought more wary be.

Spenser.

Each warn a warier carriage in the thing,
Left blind presumption work their running.
Others grow wary in their praises of one, who sets too great a value on them, lest they should raise him too high in his own imagination.

Spectator.

WAS. The preterit of To BE.

Enoch walked with God, and was not; for God took him.

Genesis.

To WASH. v. a. [parcan, Sax. wasschen, Dutch.]

1. To cleanse by ablution.

How faint, like Pilate, would I wash my hands
Of this most grievous guilty murder done!

Shakespeare.

Look how she rubs her hands. —
—It is an accustomed action with her to seem thus washing her hands.

Shakespeare.

Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin.
Thou didst wash thyself.

Psalms.

Ezekiel.

boys. Shakespeare.

A watchword every minute of the night given about the walls, to testify their vigilancy. Saucy.

WATER, n. f. [water, Dutch; potep, Saxon.]

1. Sir Isaac Newton defines water, when pure, to be a very fluid salt, volatile, and void of all savour or taste; and it seems to consist of small, smooth, hard, porous, spherical particles, of equal dia-meters, and of equal specific gravities, as Dr. Cheyne observes; and also that there are between them spaces so large, and ranged in such a manner, as to be pervious on all sides. Their smoothness accounts for their sliding easily over one another's surfaces; their sphericity keeps them also from touching one another in more points than one; and by both these their friction in sliding over one another is rendered the least possible. Their hardness accounts for the imcompressibility of water, when it is free from the intermixture of air. The porosity of water is so very great, that there is at least forty times as much space as matter in it; for water is nineteen times specifically lighter than gold, and consequently rarer in the same proportion. Quincy.

My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs,
My meek cry'd their water-flowing tears. Shaksp.

Your water is a fore decay of your whorion dead body. Shakespeare.

The sweet manner of it forc'd
Those waters from me, which I would have stopp'd,
But I had not so much of man in me;
But all my mother came into mine eyes,
And gave me up to tears. Shakespeare.

Men's evil manners live in brass, their virtues
We write in water. Shakespeare.

Those healths will make thee and thy flimsy look ill, Timon: here's that which is too weak to be a

1. An herb noxious or useless.
If he had an immoderate ambition, which is a weed, if it be a weed, apt to grow in the best soils, it doth not appear that it was in his nature. Clarendon

He wand'ring feeds
On slowly growing herbs and ranker weeds. Sandys

Too much manuring fill'd that field with weeds,
While sects, like locusts, did destroy the tree. Denham

Stinking weeds and poisonous plants have their use. More
When they are cut, let them lie, if weeds, to kill the weeds. Mortimer

Their virtue, like their Tyber's flood Rolling, its course design'd the country's good;
But oft the torrent's too impetuous speed
From the low earth tore some polluting weed;
And with the blood of Jove there always ran
Some viler part, some tincture of the man. Prior

If they are often seen to lose that little religion they were taught in their youth, 'tis no more to be wondered at, than to see a little flower choked and killed amongst rank weeds. Lau

2. [peba, Saxon; waed, Dutch.] A garment; clothes; habit; dress. Now scarce in use, except in widow's weeds,
the mourning dress of a widow.

They meet upon the way

An aged sire, in long black weeds yclad;

His feet all bare, his beard all hoary gray.

And by his belt his book he hanging had. Spenser.

Livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears, so called as it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure. Spenser.

The lutek throws her enamel'd skin,

And wide enough to wrap a fairy in. Shakspeare.

Throgs of knights, and banners bold,

In weeds of peace high triumphs hold, With force of ladies. Milton.

Lately you fan hand in woman's weed

Weep'd my glad heart. Walter.

3 It is used by Chapman for the upper garment.

The morning, in her throne of gold, Survayd the vast world, by whose orient light

The nymph adorn'd me with attires as bright;

Her own hands putting on both skirt and weed. Chapman.

TO WEED. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rid of noxious plants.

When you tow the berries of bays, weed not the borders for the first half year; for the weed growth then shade. Bacon.

Your seedlings having stood till June, below a weeding or a slight bowing upon them. Mortimer.

2. To take away as noxious plants.

Oh Marcius,

Each word thou'lt spoke hath weeded from my heart

A root of ancient envy. Shakspeare.

Sarcasms, contumelies, and invectives, till to many pages of our controversial writings, that were those weeded out, many volumes would be reduced to a more moderate bulk and temper. Dec. of Pict.

3. To free from any thing hurtful or offensive.

He weeded the kingdom of such as were devoted to Flaminia, and manumitted it from that most dangerous confederacy. Houel.

4. To root out vice.

Wife fathers be not as well aware in weeding from their children all things, as they were before in grafting in them learning. Afton.

One by one, as they appeared, they might all be weeded out, without any signs that ever they had been there. Locke.

WEEDER. n. f. [from weed.] One that takes away any thing noxious.

A weeder out of his proud adversaries,

A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shakspeare.

WEEDHOOK. n. f. [weed and hook.] A hook by which weeds are cut away or extirpated.

In May get a weedhook, a crotch, and a glove, And weed out such weeds as the corn doth not love. Taylor.

WEEDLESS. adj. [from weed.] Free from weeds; free from any thing useless or noxious.

So many weedless paradises be, Which of themselves produce no venomous sin. Donne.

A crystal brook,

When troubled most it does the bottom flow;

'Tis weedless all above, and rocks all below. Dryden.

WEEDY. adj. [from weed.]

1. Consisting of weeds.

There on the pendant boughs her coronet weed Climb'd; ring to hang, an envious siver broke, When down her weedy trophies and herself I fell in the weeping brook. Shakspeare.

2. Abounding with weeds.

Had in a weedy lake all night I lay,

Secure of safety. Dryden.

If it is weedy, let it lie upon the ground. Mortimer.

WEEK. n. f. [peec, Sax. weke, Dutch; wecka, Swedish.] The space of seven days.

Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this also.

The division of time by weeks hath been universally observed in the world, not only amongst the civilized, but likewise among the most barbarous nations. Hildes.

WEEKDAY. n. f. [week and day.] Any day not Sunday.

One said dith his week-day meal affords,

An added pudding solemniz'd the Lord's. Pope.

WEEKLY. adj. [from week.] Happening, produced or done once a week; hebdomadary.

The Jews had always their weekly readings of the law of Moses, Hooker.

So he'd out fires, ere doctors learn'd to kill, And multiply'd with hens their weekly bill. Dryden.

Nothing more frequent in their weekly papers, than affecting to confound the terms of clergy and high-church, and then loading the latter with calumny. Swift.

WEEKLY. adv. [from week.] Once a week; by hebdomadal periods.

There are obliged to perform divine worship in their times weekly, and are sometimes called hebdomadal canons. Ayliffe.

Alas! dear, quoth then the gentle knight, Well may I wern your grief is wondrous great. Spenser.

So well it her befeems, that ye would wern Some angel she had been. Spenser.

When weening to return whence they did stray, They cannot find that path which first was shown; But wander to and fro in ways unknown, Further from end than when they neared ween. Spenser.

Thy father, in pity of my hard distress, I levied an army, weening to redeem And ransom me in the diadem. Shakspeare.

Wern you of better luck, I mean in perjur'd witness, than your master, Whole master you are, while here he liv'd Upon this naughty earth. Shakspeare.

They ween'd That self-same day, by light or by surprise, To win the mount of God; and on his throne To set the envy of his state, the proud Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain. Milton.

TO WEEP. v. n. pret. and part. pass. wept, wepted. [peopan, Saxon.]

1. To show sorrow by tears.

In that sad time My manly eyes did form an humble tear; And what these sorrows could not hence exhale, That beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping. Shakspeare.

I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmanly sadness in his youth. Shakspeare.

The days of weeping and mourning for Moses were ended. Deuteronomy.

Have you wept for your sin, so that you were indeed sorrowful in your spirit? Are you so sorrowful that you hate it? Do you so hate it that you have left it? Taylor.

Away! with women weep, and leave me here, Fix'd like a man, to die without a tear, Or face or flay us both. Dryden.

A corps it was, but whole it was, unknown; Yet mov'd, however, she made the case her own, Took the bad omen of a shipwreck'd man, As for a stranger wept. Dryden.

When Darius wept over his army, that within a single age not a man of all that confluence would be left alive, Ariabanius improved his meditation by adding, that yet all of them should meet with to many evils, that every one should with himself dead long before. Wake.

Rye-grass grows on clayey and weeping grounds.

Mortimer.

WEPPER. n. f. [from weep.]

1. One who sheds tears; a lamenter; a bewailer; a mourner.

If you have lov'd God in a holy life, fend away the women and the weepers: tell them it is a foolish intemperance to weep too much as to laugh too much. It thou art alone, or with fitting company, die as thou shouldst, but do not die impudently, and like a fox catch'd in a trap. Taylor.

Laughter is easy, but the wonder lies,

What store of time supply'd the weeper's eyes. Dryden.

2. A white border on the sleeve of a mourning coat.

WEIRISH. adj. [See WEARISH.] This old word is used by Afton in a sense which the lexicographers seem not to have known. Applied to tufles, it means infipid; applied to the body, weak and wulhy; here it seems to mean, sour, furly.

A voice not soft, weak, piping, womanish; but audible, strong, and manlike: a counter-voice not weech and crabb'd, but fair and comely. Afton.

TO WEIL. v. n. preterit wot or wote. [witan, Sax. witen, Dut.] To know; to be informed; to have knowledge. Obsolete.

Him the prince with gentle court did board,

Sir knight, might I of you thus courtly read,

To weel why on your duchy, to quickly lord,

Bear ye the picture of that lady's head? Spenser.

I had,

On pain of punishment, the world to weel

We had up peedleis. Shakspeare.

But weel I weel thy cruel wrong

Adorns a nobler poet's tongue. Prior.

Spenser.

WEIN. n. f. [pepel, Sax. vetel, Dut. weinh, Lat.] A grub.

A worm called a wein, bred under ground,

feedeth upon roots, as parsnips and carrots. Bacon.

Corn is so innocent from breeding of mice, that it doth not produce the very vermin that live in it and consume it. Bentley.

WEASEL. n. f. [See WEASEL.]

I suck melancholy out of a song, as a weasel sucks eggs. Shakespeare.

The corn-devouring weasel here abides, And the wife ant. Dryden.

WEFT. The old preterit and part. pass. from TO WAVE. Spenser.

WEFT. n. f. [guave, Fr. vafa, to wander, Islandick; vagus, Latin.]

1. That of which the claim is generally waved; any thing wandering without an owner, and seized by the lord of the manor.

His horse, it is the herald's weft; No, 'tis a mare. Ben Jonson.

2. It is in Bacon for wast, a gentle blast. The swell of violets exceedeth in sweetness that of pines, and the strongest sort of smells are best in a weft wind off. Bacon.

WEFT. n. f. [pefta, Sax.] The woof of cloth.

WEFTAGE. n. f. [from weft.] Texture.

The whole muscles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned; whereby the weftage of the fibres might more easily be observed. Cru.

TO WEIGH. v. a. [wagen, Sax. weyhen, Dutch.]

1. To examine by the balance.

Earth taken from land adjoining to the Nile, and preserved so as not to be wet nor wasted, and weighed daily, will not alter weight until the seventeenth of June, when the river beginneth to rise; and then it will grow more and more ponderous, till the river cometh to its height. Bacon.

Th' Eternal hung forth his golden scales, Wherein all things created first he weigh'd. Milton. She does not weigh her meat in a pair of scales, but she weighs it in a much better balance; so much as gives a proper strength to her body, and renders it able and willing to obey the soul. Law.

2. To be equivalent to in weight.

They that must weigh out my afflictions, They that my trust must grow to, live not here; They are, as all my comforts are, far hence. Shakespeare.

By the exsuction of the air out of a glass vessel, it made that vessel take up, or suck up, to speak in the common language, a body weighing divers ounces. Boyle.

3. To pay, allot, or take by weight.

They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. Zechariah.

I weigh not you— You do not weigh me; that is, you care not for me. Shakespeare.

8. TO WEIGH DOWN. To overbalance.

Four weighs down faith with shame. Daniel.

9. TO WEIGH DOWN. To overburden; to oppress with weight; to depress.

In thy blood will reign A melancholy damp of cold and dry, To weigh thy spirits down. Milton. Her father's crimes

Sit heavy on her, and weigh down her prayers; A crown usurp'd, a lawful king depos'd, His children murder'd. Dryden.

My soul is quite weigh'd down with care, and asks The lost refreshment of a moment's sleep. Addison. Excellent persons, weigh'd down by this habitual sorrow of heart, rather deferre our compassion than reproach. Addison.

TO WEIGH. v. n.

1. To have weight.

Exactly weighing, and strangling a chicken in the scales, upon an immediate ponderation, we could discover no difference in weight; but suffering it to lie eight or ten hours, until it grew perfectly cold, it weighed most sensibly lighter. Brown.

2. To be considered as important; to have weight in the intellectual balance.

This objection ought to weigh with those, whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge. Locke.

A wife man is then best satisfied, when he finds that the same argument which weighs with him has weighed with thousands before him, and is such as hath born down all opposition. Addison.

3. To raise the anchor.

When gathering clouds o'ershadow all the skies, And shoot quick lightning, weigh, my boys, he cries. Dryden.

4. To bear heavily; to press hard.

Canst thou not murther to a mind defend'd, And with some sweet oblivious antidote Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff Which weighs upon the heart? Shakespeare.

5. To sink by its own weight.

The Indian fig boweth so low, as it taketh root again; the plenty of the sap, and the softness of the stalk, making the bough, being overladen, weigh down. Bacon.

WEIGHED. adj. [from weigh.] Experienced.

In an embassy of weight, choice was made of some sad person of known experience, and not of a young man, not weigh'd in state matters. Bacon.

WEIGHED. n. f. [from weigh.] He who weighs.

WEIGHT. n. f. [pht, Saxon.]

1. Quantity measured by the balance.

Tobacco cut and weighed, and then dried by the fire, loseth weight; and, after being laid in the open air, recovereth weight again. Bacon.

Pain would I chuse a middle course to steer; Nature's too kind, and justice too severe: Speak for us both, and to the balance bring.

On either side, the father and the king: Heav'n knows my heart is bent to favour thee; Make it but scanty weight, and leave the rest to me. Dryden.

So was every thing of the temple, even to the weight of a flesh-hook, given to David, as you may see. Lestry.

Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight; and yet there was no acid found in its body. Arbutnot.

2. A mass by which, as the standard, other bodies are examined.

Just balances, just weights, shall ye have. Levi.

Undoubtedly there were such weights which the physicians used, who, though they might reckon according to the weight of the money, they did not weigh their drugs with pieces of money. Arbut.

When the balance is entirely broke, by mighty weights fallen into either scale, the power will never continue long in equal division, but run entirely into one. Swift.

3. Ponderous mass.

A man leaseth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if proportionable, strengthenth the sinews by contracting them, otherwise, where no contraction is needful, weight hindereth; as we see, in horse-races, men are curious to force that there be not the least weight upon the one horse more than upon the other. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backward, and then forward, with so much the greater force. Brown.

Wolsey, who from his own great store might have A palace or a college for his grave, Lies here interr'd:

Nothing but earth to earth, no pond'rous weight Upon him, but a pebble or a quoit: It thus thou heest neglected, what must we Hope after death, who are but shreds of thee? Bishop Corbet.

All their confidence Under the weight of mountains buried deep. Milton.

Pride, like a gulf, allows us up; our very virtues, when to leavened, becoming weights and plummet to sink us to the deeper ruin. Gow. of the Tong. Then shun the ill; and know, my dear, Kindness and constancy will prove

The only pillars fit to bear So vast a weight as that of love. Prior.

4. Gravity; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

Heaviness or weight is not here considered as being such a natural quality, whereby condensed bodies do of themselves tend downwards; but rather as being an affection, whereby they may be measured. Hilkins.

The shaft, that slightly was impress'd, Now from his heavy fall with weight increas'd, Drove through his neck. Dryden.

What natural agent impel them so strongly with a transverse side blow, against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are falling? Bentley.

5. Pressure; burden; overwhelming power.

Thou art no Atlas for to great a weight. Shaksp. As some of the angels did scarce sooner receive than break the law of obedience; so some men, by an unhappy imitation of such angels, are more ready to slander the weight of their yoke than to bear it. Holyday.

So shall the world go on, To good malignant, to bad men benign, Under her own weight groaning. Milton.

We must those, who grow beneath the weight Of age, disease, or want, commiserate. Danm.

The prince may carry the plough, but the weight lies upon the people. L'Estrange.

Possession's load was grown so great, He sunk beneath the cumbrous weight. Swift.

They are like so many weights upon our minds, that make us less able and less inclined to rule up our thoughts and affections to the things that are above. Law.

6. Importance; power; influence; efficacy; consequence; moment.

How to make ye suddenly an answer, In such a point of weight, so near mine honour, In truth I know not. Shakespeare.

It is the right of heir carry any weight with it, if it be the ordinance of God, must not all be subject to it? Locke.

To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper, and be of the more weight, other agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states. Locke.

An author's arguments lose their weight, when we are perfused that he only writes for argument's sake. Addison.

*See, Lo! the sorrows of my heart,
Ere yet it be too late;
And hear my Saviour's dying groans,
To give those sorrows weight.*
The solemnities that encompass the magnificent add dignity to all his actions, and weight to all his words. Atterbury

WEIGHTILY, adv. [from weighty.]

1. Heavily; ponderously.

2. Solidly; importantly.

Is his poetry the worse, because he makes his agents speak weightily and sententiously? Broome WEIGHTINESS, n. f. [from weighty.]

1. Ponderosity; gravity; heaviness.

2. Solidity; force.

I fear I have dwelt longer on this passage than the weightiness of any argument it requires. Locke

3. Importance.

The apparent defect of her judgment, joined to the weightiness of the adventure, caused many to marvel. Shakespeare

WEIGHTLESS, adj. [from weight.] Light;
having no gravity.

How by him balanc'd in the weightless air?
Canst thou the wisdom of his works declare? Sandys

It must both weightless and immortal prove,
Because the centre of it is above. Dryden

WEIGTRY, adj. [from weight.]

1. Heavy; ponderous.

You have already weary'd fortune so,
She cannot further be your friend or foe,
But fits all breathless, and admires to feel
A fate to weighty that it stops her wheel. Dryden

2. Important; momentous; efficacious.

I to your assistance do make love,
Making the business for the common eye
For tundry weighty reasons. Shakespeare

It only torrid suits in lighter loffe and indignities, such as our Lord there mentions, and making the law the instrument of revenge in weightier matters. Ketticell

No fool Pythagoras was thought:
Whilst he his weighty doctrines taught,
He made his listening scholars stand,
Their mouth still cover'd with their hand:
Else, may be, some odd thinking youth,
Let friend to doctrine than to truth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears
Attend the music of the spheres. Prior

Thus spoke to my lady the knight full of care,
Let me have your advice in a weighty affair. Swift

3. Rigorous; severe. Not in use.

If, after two days thine, Athens contains thee,
Attend our weighty judgment. Shakespeare

WELAWAY, interj. [This I once believed a corruption of wel away, that is, happiness is gone: so Junius explained it; but the Saxon exclamation is palapa, wo on wo. From welaway is formed by corruption wellday.] Alas.

Harrow now out, and welaway, he cried,
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light! Spenser

Ah, welaway, most noble lords, how can
Your cruel eyes endure to precious sight? Spenser

Welaway, the while I was so fond,
To leave the good that I had in hand. Spenser

WELCOME, adj. [bien venu, French; piscune, Saxon; welkom, Dutch.]

1. Received with gladness, admitted willingly to any place or enjoyment; grateful; pleasing.

I serve you, madam:
Your graces are right welcome. Shakespeare
He, though not of the plot, will like it,
And with it should proceed; for, unto men
Prest with their wants, all change is ever welcome.
Ben Jonson

Here let me earn my bread,
Till oft invoked death
Halt the welcome end of all my pains. Milton
He that knows how to make those he converses with easy, has found the true art of living, and being welcome, and valued every where. Locke

2. To bid WELCOME. To receive with protections of kindness.

Some stood in a row in to civil a fashion, as if to welcome us; and divers put their arms a little abroad, which is their gesture when they bid any welcome. Bacon

WELCOME, interj. A form of salutation used to a new comer, elliptically used for you are welcome.

Welcome, he said,
O long expected, to my dear embrace! Dryden
Welcome, great monarch, to your own. Dryden
WELCOME, n. f.

1. Salutation of a new comer.

Welcome ever smiles, and farewell goes out sighing.
Shakespeare
Leontes opening his free arms, and weeping
His welcome forth. Shakespeare

2. Kind reception of a new comer.

I should be free from injuries, and abound as much in the true causes of welcomes, as I should find want of the effects thereof. Sidney
I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome. Shakespeare
Madam, new years may well expect to find Welcome from you, to whom they are so kind:
Still as they pass they court and smile on you,
And make your beauty, as themselves, seem new.
Waller

Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and impartiality keeps it, truth finds an entrance and a welcome too. South

To WELCOME, v. a. To salute a new comer with kindness.

I know no cance
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard. Shakespeare
They stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us. Bacon

Thus we salute thee with our early song,
And welcome thee, and with thee long. Milton

To welcome home
His warlike brother, in Pirithous come. Dryden
The lark and linnet strain their warbling throats,
To welcome in the spring. Dryden

WELCOME to our house, n. f. [lactuca marina, Latin.] An herb. Ainsworth

WELCOMENESS, n. f. [from welcome.]
Gratefulness.

Our joys, after some centuries of years, may seem to have grown older, by having been enjoyed to many ages; yet will they really still continue new, not only upon the shores of their welcomeness, but by their perpetually equal, because minute, distance from a period. Boswell

WELCOMER, n. f. [from welcome.] The saluter or receiver of a new comer.
Farewell, thou woeful welcomer of glory! Shakespeare

WELD, or WOULD, n. f. [luteola, Latin.]
Yellow weed, or driers weed.

To WELD, for To weld. Spenser

To WELD, v. a. To beat one metal into another, so as to incorporate them.

Sparkling or welwing heat is used when you double up your iron to make it thick enough, and to weld on work in the doublings into one another. Mozon

WELDER, n. f. [A term perhaps merely Irish; though it may be derived from
To weld, to turn or manage: whence welder, welder.] Manager; actual occupier.

Such immediate tenants have others under them and so a third and fourth in subordination, till it comes to the welder, as they call him, who sits at a rack-rent, and lives miserably. Swift

WELFARE, n. f. [well and fare.] Happiness; success; prosperity.

If friends to a government forbear their assistance they put it in the power of a few desperate men to ruin the welfare of those who are superior to them in strength and interest. Addison

Discretion is the perfection of reason: cunning is a kind of instinct that only looks out after our immediate interest and welfare. Spencer

To WELK, v. a. [Of this word in Spenser
I know not well the meaning: peulcan, in Saxon, is to roll; walken, in German,
and pelcen, in Saxon, are clouds; whence
I suppose welk, or whilk, is an undulation or corrugation, or corrugated or convolved body. Whilk is used for a small shellfish.] To cloud; to obscure. It seems in Spenser both active and neuter.

Now sad winter welked bath the day,
And Phœbus, weary of his yearly talk,
Establish'd bath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes hark. Spenser
As gentle shepherd in sweet eve-tide;
When ruddy Phœbus' guns to welk in west,
Marks which do bite their hasty supper best. Spenser

The welked Phœbus 'gan avail
His weary wain. Spenser

WELKED, adj. Set with protuberances.
Properly, I believe, welkel, from whelk.

Methought his eyes
Were two full moons, he had a thousand noses, Horns welk'd and wav'd like the curridged sea. Shakespeare

WELKIN, n. f. [from peulcan, to roll, or pelcen, clouds, Saxon.]

1. The visible regions of the air. Out of use, except in poetry.

Ne in all the welkin was no cloud. Chaucer
He leaves the welkin way most beaten plain,
And rapt with whirling wheels inflames the skyen
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine. Spenser

The swallow peeps out of her nest,
And cloudy welkin cleareth. Spenser
Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood;
Amaze the welkin with your broken slaves. Shakespeare

With feats of arms
From either end of heav'n the welkin burns. Milton

Now my task is smoothly done,
I can fly or I can run
Quickly to the green earth's end,
Where the bow'd welkin flow doth bend. Milton

Their hideous yells
Rend the dark welkin. Philips

2. WELKIN Eye, is, I suppose, blue eye;
sky-coloured eye.

Yet were it true
To say this boy were like me! Come, for page.
Look on me with your welkin eye, sweet villain. Shakespeare

WELL, n. f. [pelle, pell, Saxon.]

1. A spring; a fountain; a source.
Begin then, fountains of the sacred well,
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring. Milton

As the root and branch are but one tree,
And well and stream do but one river make;
So if the root and well corrupted be,
The stream and branch the same corruption take. Dantes

2. A deep narrow pit of water.
Now up, now down, like buckets in a well. Dryden

The muscles are so many well-buckets; when one of them acts and draws, 'tis necessary that the other must obey. Dryden

3. The cavity in which stairs are placed. A hollow newell stair is made about a square hollow newel; suppose the well-hole to be eleven foot long, and six foot wide, and we would bring up a pair of stairs from the first floor eleven foot high, it being intended a sky-light shall fall through the hollow newel. Mason

To WELL, v. n. [peallan, Saxon.] To spring; to issue as from a spring.

Then by a crystal stream did gently play,
Which from a sacred fountain welled forth a way.
Spenser

A dreary corse,
All wallow'd in his own yet lukewarm blood,
That from his wound yet welled forth, alas!
Spenser
Hark! it seems to lift him from the ground,
With clotted locks, and blood that welled from out the wound.
Dryden

From his two springs
Pore welling out, he through the lucid lake
Of fair Damocles rolls his infant stream.
Thomson
To WILL. A. A. To pour any thing forth.

To her people wealth they forth do well,
And health to every foreign nation.
Spenser
WELL. adj. [Well seems to be sometimes an adjective, though it is not always easy to determine its relations.]

1. Not sick; being in health.
Lady, I am not well, else I should answer
From a full flowing stomach.
Shakespeare
In poison there is physick; and this news,
That would, had I been well, have made me sick,
Being sick, hath in some measure made me well.
Shakespeare

While thou art well, thou mayest do much good;
but when thou art sick, thou canst not tell what thou shalt be able to do: it is not very much nor very good. Few men mend with sickness, as there are but few who by travel and a wandering life become devout.
Taylor

Men under irregular appetites never think themselves well, so long as they fancy they might be better, then from better they must rise to best.
J. Strange

'Tis easy for any, when well, to give advice to them that are not.
Wake

2. Happy.
Mark, we use
To say the dead are well.
Shakespeare
Holdings were to plentiful, and holders so scarce, as well was the landlord, who could get one to be his tenant.
Carrus

Charity is made the constant companion and perfection of all virtues; and well it is for that virtue where it most enters and longest stays.
Spratt

3. Convenient; advantageous.
This exactness is necessary, and it would be well too if it extended itself to common conversation.
Locke

It would have been well for Genoa, if she had followed the example of Venice, in not permitting her nobles to make any purchase of lands in the dominions of a foreign prince.
Addison

4. Being in favour.
He followed the fortunes of that family; and was well with Henry the Fourth.
Dryden

5. Recovered from any sickness or misfortune.
I am sorry
For your displeasure; but all will sure be well.
Shakespeare

Just thoughts and modest expectations are easily satisfied. If we don't over-rate our pretensions, all will be well.
Collier

WELL. adv. [well, Gothic; pell, Saxon;
well, Dutch; vel, Islandick.]

6. Not ill; not unhappily.
Some gentle, and more chaste, kind heav'n
To this well-lotted peer has given:
What then? he must have rule and sway;
Else all is wrong till he's in play.
Prior

My bargains, and well-won thrift, he calls interest.
Shakespeare
Thou one bad act with many deeds well done
mayst cover.
Milton

8. Skillfully; properly; in a laudable manner.

Beware, and govern well thy appetite.
Milton
Whether the learn'd Minerva be her theme,
Or chaste Diana bathing in the stream,
None can record their heavenly praise to well.
Dry
What poet would not mourn to see
His brother write as well as he?
Swift

9. Not amiss; not unsuccessfully; not erroneously.

Solyman commended them for a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason.
Knolles

The father that philosopher well-blam'd,
Who long and loudly in the schools declam'd.
Denham

'Tis almost impossible to translate verbally and well.
Dryden

5. Not insufficiently; not defectively.

The plain of Jordan was well watered every where.
Geoprs
We are well able to overcome it.
Numbers
The merchant adventurers, being a strong company, and well underfitted with rich men, held out bravely.
Bacon

6. To a degree that gives pleasure.

I like well, in some places, fair columns upon froncs of carpenter's work.
Bacon

7. With praise; favourably.
All the world speaks well of you.
Pope

8. Well is sometimes, like the French bien, a term of concession.

The knot might well be cut, but said it could not be.
Sidney

9. Conveniently; suitably.

Know
In measure what the mind can well contain.
Milton

10. To a sufficient degree: a kind of slight sense.

A private caution I know not well how to fort, unless I should call it political, by no means to build too near a great neighbour.
Hutton

11. It is a word by which something is admitted as the ground for a conclusion.

Well, let's away, and say how much is done.
Shakespeare

Well, by this author's confession, a number superior are for the succession in the house of Hanover.
Swift

12. As well as. Together with; not less than.

Long and tedious, as well as grievous and uneasy courses of physick, how necessary forever to the cure, much enfeebled the patient, and reduce him to a low and languishing state.
Blackmore

Coptos was the magazine of all the trade from Aethiopia, by the Nile, as well as of those commodities that came from the west by Alexandria.
Arabian

13. Well enough. In a moderate degree;
tolerably.

14. Well is him or me; bene est, he is happy.

Well is him that dwelleth with a wife of understanding, and that hath not slipped with his tongue.
Feeling

15. Well nigh. Nearly; almost.

I fixed well nigh half the angelick name.
Milton

16. It is used much in composition, to express any thing right, laudable, or not defective.

Antiochus understanding him not to be well affected to his affairs, provided for his own safety.
2 Mac

There may be safety to the well affected Persians; but to those which do conspire against us, a memorial of destruction.
Esther

Should a whole host at once discharge the bow,
My well-arm'd shaft with death prevents the foe.
Pope

What well-appointed leader fronts us here?
Shakespeare

Well apparell'd April on the heel
Of limping winter treads.
Shakespeare

The pow'r of wisdom march'd before,
And, ere the sacrificing throng he join'd,
Admonish'd this his all-attending mind.
Pope

Such music
Before was never made,
But when of old the fons of morning sang,
Whilst the Creator great

His constellations set,
And the well-balanc'd world on hinges set.

Learners must at first be believers, and then master's rules having been once made known to them, they mislead those who think it to be their excuse them, if they go out of their way in a beaten track.
Locke

He chose a thousand horse, the flower of all
His warlike troops, to wait the funeral.
To bear him back, and thence Evander's gef; A well-becoming, but a weak relict.
Dryden

Those opposed files,
Which lately met in the midline shock
And furious close of civil butchery,
Shall now in mutual well-bekcmg rank
March all one way.

Over the Elean plains thy well-breath'd horse
Impels the flying car, and wins the course.
Dryden
More dismal than the loud dislodged roar
Of brazen enginery, that catches storms
The falcon of a well-bent eye.

He conducted his circle among the same well chosen friendships and alliances with which he began it.
Shakespeare

My son corrupts a well derived nature
With his inducement.
Shakespeare

If good accrue, 'tis conferred most commonly the bale and untimely, and only happening times to well doers.
Pope

It grieves me he should desperately adventure
the loss of his well-deserving life.
Dryden

What a pleasure is well directed study in the search of truth!
Locke

A certain spark of honour, which rose in her act, disput'd of nearly made her fear to be alone with him,
with whom alone she desired to be.
Sidney

The unprepossessed, the well-disposed, who both together make much the major part of the world, are affected with a due fear of these things.
South

A clear idea is that, whereof the mind hath such a full and evident perception, as it does receive from an outward object, operating duly on a well-disposed organ.
Locke

And the main two mighty fleets engage;
Action furveys the well-disput'd prize.
Dryden

The ways of well-doing are in number even as many as are the kinds of voluntary actions. In that whatsoever we do in this world, and may do it all, we shew ourselves therein by well doing to be wise.

The conscience of well-doing may pay for a recompense.
Locke

Reg God's grace, that the day of judgment may not overtake us unawares, but that by a patient well-doing we may wait for glory, honour, and immortality.
Newton

God will judge every man according to his works, to them, who by patient continuance in well doing endure through the heat and burden of the day, he will give the reward of their labour.
Regis

As for the spear I throw,
As flies an arrow from the well-drawn bow.
Pope

Fair nymphs and well-drest'd youths around her throne,
But every eye was fix'd on her alone.
Pope

Such a doctrine in St. James's air Should chance to make the well-drest'd rabble
there.
Pope

The desire of esteem, riches, or power, makes men espouse the well-endowed opinions in fashion.
Locke

We ought to stand firm in well-established principles, and not be tempted to change for every difficulty.
Hall

Echeinus sage, a venerable man!
Whose well-taught mind the present age surpass'd.
Pope

Some reliques of the true antiquity, though disguised, a well-eyed man may happily discover.
Spenser

How sweet the products of a peaceful reign!
The heav'n-taught poet, and enchanting strain,
The well-fill'd palace, the perpetual fest,
A land rejoicing, and a people blest.
Pope

Turkish blood did his young hands imbue:
From thence returning with deserv'd applause,
Against the Moors his well-beth'd sword he drew.
Dryden

Fairest piece of well-form'd earth,
Urge not thus your haughty birth.
Water

WHIM. n. f. [chwen, Welsh; genpla, Spanish, Latin.] Fun; a game.

With whims or with turges thy hovel renew.
Tupper

Plants that have pickles in their leaf are holly, juniper, whin-bush, and thistle. Bacon

To WHINE. v. n. [pauin, Saxon; we-nen, Dutch; exnan, Welsh.] To lam-ment in low murmurs; to make a plaintive noise; to moan meanly and effeminately.

They came to the wood, where the hounds were in couples laying their coming, but with a whine, without leaving liberty. Sidney

At his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That page blubb'd at him. Shakespeare

Twice and once the hedge-pog whin'd. Shakespeare Whip him.

Till, like a boy, you see him cunge his face,
And whine aloud for mercy. Shakespeare

The common people have a whining tone and accent in their speech, as if they did still suffer
some oppression. Davies

Then at we whine, look pale,
And tell our tale,

Men are in pain

For us again;
So neither speaking doth become
The lover's state, nor being dumb. Buckling

He made a viler noise than swine
In windy weather, when they whine. Hudibras

Some, under sheep's clothing, had the properties of wolves; that is, they could whine and howl, as well as bite and devour. South

I was not born to hate to flatter crowds,
And move your pity by a whining tale. Drayton

Laughing at their whining may perhaps be the proper method. Locke

Late was given for noble purposes; and therefore it must not be sacrificed to a quarrel, nor whin'd away in love. Cibber

Upon a general mourning, merchants and woollendrapers would in four-and-twenty hours rate their clothes and silks to above a double price, and if the mourning continued long, come whining with petitions to the court, that they were ready to starve. South

WHINE. n. f. [from the verb.] Plaintive noise; mean or affected complaint.

The favourable opinion of men comes oftentimes by a few demure looks and affected whines, set off with some odd devotional potters and gal-maces. South

Thy hateful whine of woe
Breaks in upon my sorrows, and distracts
My jarring fancies with thy beggar's cry. Pope

To WHINSEY. v. n. [whinn, Latin; from the found.] To make a noise like a horse or colt.

WHINSEY. n. f. [pinnan and ape, to gum honour, Saxon. Skinner. I know not whether this word was ever used seriously, and therefore perhaps it might be denominated in contempt from whin, a tool to cut whins.] A sword, in contempt.

He hatch'd his whinward up, that fled
When he was falling, or his feet. Hudibras

To WHIP. v. a. [hpeopan, Saxon; wippen, Dutch.]

1. To strike with any thing tough and flexible.

He took
The harness'd fusts, that still with horror shook,
And plies them with the lash, and whips 'em on,
And, as he whips, upbraids 'em with his tongue. Adams

2. To sew slightly.

In half a whiff with needles and less he. Garr

3. To drive with lashes.

It is unheard of in cities, and by both troops,
The knee cloth knock'd off, and is well paid for
To whip his dandruff, or the few pangs
From out the circle of his territories. Shakespeare

To whip the fusts in quarters over the sea, again,
Lash hence those ever swarming rags of rags,
These rags could be a text. South

Since I put it to rest, play'd to rest, and whipp'd top, I knew not what it was to be beaten till fairly.
Shakespeare

If order'd every day to whip his top, a long as to make him weary, he will work for his bet, at yet promise him as a reward of having whipp'd his top lately quite out. Locke

Whipp'd even, unfortified with wine or love,
Froth'd by the flatterer's noise, indifference. Harte

4. To connect with lashes.

I'll leave you to the hearing of the cause,
Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all.
Shakespeare

Reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this,
Left you should chance to whip your mistress. Shakespeare

Hourly we see some raw pin-feather'd thing
Attempt to mount, and with his heroes sing.
Who for false ones, as whipp'd at school,
But rather days, than weeks, grammar-rule. Dryden

How did he return this haughty brat,
Who whipt the winds, and made the sea his slave?
Dryden

More than feting children a task, and whipping them, without any more ado, if it be not due to our fancy. Locke.

Oh chain me! whip me! let me be the scorn
Of fordid rables and insulting crowds!
Give me but life. Smith.

Heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and are not able to bear the pain and indignity of whipping. Swift.

5. To lash with farscafin.

They would whip me with their five wits, till I was as cret fallen as a dried pear. Shakespeare.

It being is firmly whipt about with small put,
that it may the easier move in the edge of the rower. Milton.

To WHIP. v. a. To take any thing nimble; always with a particle determining the sense; as, out, on, up, down, &c.

A ludicrous use.

In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras bearing something fir,
He whipt his rapier out, and cries, a rat!

And in this he much a precaution kills
The unseen good old man. Shakespeare.

She in a hurry whips up her darling under her arm. Leitch.

Rise yourself upon your hinder legs, and then stretch out your head: I can easily whip up to your horns, and so out of the wall. Leitch.

With Susan whips her linen from the rope,
Whilst the first dizzling shower is born alope.

The whipped, it lies ready for you to whip it out in a moment. Swift.

To WHIP. v. n. To move nimbly. A ludicrous word.

Two friends travelling together, met a bear upon the way: the one whips up a tree, and the other throws himself flat upon the ground. Leitch.

The humble figure made a sudden start to follow, but the justice of the quorum whipped between. Taylor.

WHIP. n. f. [Ipsop, Saxon.] An influment of correction tough and phant.

There fit internal Pain,
And fast beside I sit tumultuous State;

The one in hand no non whip did train,
The other brandish'd a bloody knife. Spenser.

Put in every honest hand a whip,
To lash them down to the rough world. Shakespeare.

Love is merely a mischievous, and defies as well a dark double and a whip as in the air. Shakespeare.

High on her head the reins two twisted snakes,
Her chain for rattles, and her back for the flukes. Dryden.

In his right hand he holds the whip, with which he is supposed to drive the horses of the sun. Dryden.

WHIP and spur. With the utmost haste.
I wish each pole to Come whip and spur, and dash'd thro' them and thick. Dryden.

WHIPCORD. n. f. [whip and cord.] Cord with fair words, has the whiphand of her, and drags her out with many stripes. Dryden.

WHIPLASH. n. f. The lash or small end of a whip.

Have whiplash well knotted and cartope mough Tuffet. Tupper.

WHIPPER. n. f. [from whip.] One who punishes with whips.

Love is merely a mischievous, and defies as well a dark double and a whip as in the air, and the reason why they are not so punished is, that the whippers are in love too. Shakespeare.

WHIPPINOPOST. n. f. [whip and post.] A pillar to which criminals are bound when they are lashed.

Could not the whippinopost prevail,
With all its rick, nor the jail,
To keep from flying scourge thy skin,
And ankle tree from non em? Hudibras.

WHIPSAW. n. f. [whip and saw.]
The whipsaw is used by joiners to saw such great pieces of flint that the hand saw did not easily reach through. Mason.

piece of wood fastened to the helm, which the steersman holds in his hand to move the helm and turn the ship. Barley.

WHIPSTER. n. f. [from whip.] A nimble fellow.

I am not valiant neither;
But every puny whipster gets my sword. Shakespeare.

Give that whipster but his sword,
He takes my lord chief justice' warrant. Prior.

WHIP, for whipped.
In Frowde's number he slept,
To be wroth than the debt to be kept. Leitch.

To WHIRL. v. a. [Ipsop, Saxon;
whelen, Dut.] To turn round rapidly.

My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel;
I know not where I am, nor what I do. Shakespeare.

He whirls his sword about without delay,
And hews through adverse toes an ample way. Dryden.

With his tail force he whirls it first around,
But the soft yielding air receives the wound. Dryden.

Falling from on high, with bedewing sound
Whirls the black waves and rattling stones around. Addison.

With impetuous motion whirls space,
This magic wheel still moves, yet keeps its place. Cromwell.

They have ever been taught by their senses, that the sun, with all the planets and the fixed stars,
are whirled round this little globe. Watts.

To WHIRL. v. n.
1. To run round rapidly.

Be rapt with whirling wheels, influences the fly
With fire not made to burn, but fairly set to move. Spenser.

Five moons were seen to-morrow,
Four fixed, and the fifth did whirl about.

The other four in wondrous motion. Shakespeare.

As young strappings whirl the top for sport
On the smooth pavine it of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about,
Admired with clamours of the beautiful rout. Dryden.

Wild and distracted with their fears,
They jutting plunge amidst the foaming deeps;
The flood away the struggling whirls sweeps,
And men, and arms, and horses whirling bears. Smith.

2. To move hastily.

She what he fears regards no more
Than the dead rocks when the loud billows roar;
But whirls away to finish his hateful fight,
Hid in the foam. Dryden.

WHIRL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Gyration; quick rotation; circular motion; rapid circunvolution.

I were well on judgments but in plays of range;
But even your former and d'hauch's change
With such a whirl of words of your age
Are told, and cannot score the moon the fringe. Dryden.

Wings raise my feet; I'm pleas'd to mount on high,
Trace all the mazes of the liquid sky;
Their various turnings and their whirls declare,
And live in the vast regions of the air. Creech.

Nor whirl of time, nor flight of years, can waste Creech.

I have been watching what thoughts came up in the whirl of fancy, that were worth communicating
Pope

How the car rattles, how its landing wheels
Smoke in the whirl; the melting fond attend,
And in the noble dust the chariot's lot. South.

2. Any thing moved with rapid rotation.

For though in dreadful whirls we hang High on the broken wave,
I knew then wert not flow to hear,
Nor impatient to save. Spenser.

WHIRL. n. f. [whirl and but.] Any thing moved rapidly round to give a blow. It is frequently used by the poets for the ancient celtus.

At whirls but he had slain many, and was now himself slain by Pollux. Leitch.

The whirls falling blow they nimbly shun,
And win the race ere they begin to run. Creech.

The guardian angels of King Henry he rejected, as Dares did the whirls of Troy, when they were the own in force him by Eutylus. Dryden.

The whirls and the rapid race shall be Rever'd for Cæsar, and ord'nd by me. Dryden.

at whirls the axon in peritrochio. Arch. and Pope.

That once they gave them their beginning,
And set the whirl gig whirling. Prior.

WHIRLPOOL. n. f. [whirlpool, Saxon.]

WHIRLPOOL. n. f. A place where the water moves circularly, and draws whatever comes within the circle toward its centre;
a vortex.

Poor Tom! whom the foul fend had led through ford and whirlpool over bar and pasture. Shakespeare.

In the fathoms is profound Down sunk they, like a falling stone,
By raging whirls o'erthrown. Sandys.

This calm of heaven, the mortal's not lady,
Into an unquiet whirlpool draws you fast,
And in a moment holds you. Dryden.

Send forth, ye wife! send forth your whirling
thought!

Let it turn with empty notions fraught
Of airy columns every moment broke,
Of whirling whirls, and of spheres of smoke. Prior.

There might arise to be vertiginous motions or whirlpools in the matter of the chaos, whereby the atoms must be thrust and crowded to the middle of these whirlpools, and there conspire one another into great solid bodies. Bentley.

WHIRLWIND. n. f. [werbelwind, Germ.]
A stormy wind moving circularly.

In the very torrent and whirlwind of your passion, beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. Shakespeare.

With whirlwinds from beneath the told the ship.

And bare expos'd the bosom of the deep. Dryden.

WHIRLING. adj. A word formed in imitation of the sound expressed by it.

From the lake the whirling pleasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings. Pope.

WHISK. n. f. [wijchen, to wipe, Germ.]

1. A small below or brush.

The white of an egg, though in part transparent, yet being long agitated with a whisk or spoon, loses its transparency. Boyle.

If you break any china with the top of the whisk
on the swallow-tree, gather up the fragments. Swift.

2. A part of a woman's dress.

An easy means to prevent being one farthing the worse for the abatement of interest, is wearing a whisk instead of a point de Venice. Child.

To WHISK. v. a. [wijchen, to wipe, Germ.]

1. To sweep with a whisk all before.

2. To move nimbly, to whisk.

Cardan believ'd great states to be Upon the tip of the head's tail's end;
That, as the whisk it it wards the fin,
Snow'd might capers up and down. Hudibras.

WHISKER. n. f. [from whisk.] The hair growing on the upper lip unshaven; the mustachro.

A sacrifice to fall of state,
Whose thread of life the fatal sisters
Did twist together with its whiflers.
Behold four kings, in majesty rever'd,
With hoary whiflers and a forty beard.
A painter added a pair of whiflers to the face.

Hudibras.

Pope.

Addison.

To WHISPER. v. n. [uisperen, Dutch.]
To speak with a low voice, so as not to be heard but by the ear close to the speaker; to speak with suspicion or timorous caution.

He sometimes with fearful countenance would define the King to look to himself; for that all the court and city were full of whiflings, and expectation of some sudden change.

Sadler.

All that hate me whisper together against me.

Psalms.

In speech of man, the whispering or murmur, whether louder or softer, is an interior sound, but the speaking out is an exterior sound, and the result you can never make a tone, nor sing, in a whispering, but in speech you may.

Bacon.

The king Aecis calls;
Then softly whisper'd in her faithful ear,
And bade his daughters at the rites appear.

Pope.

It is as offensive to speak wit in a fool's company, as it would be ill manners to whisper in it;
he is displeased at both, because he is ignorant of what is said.

Pope.

The hollow whispering breeze, the phant' tells Pau'd down amid the twisted roots

Thomson.

To WHISPER. v. a.

1. To address in a low voice.

When they talk of him, they shush their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear.

Shakespeare.

Give sorrow words; the grief that does not speak
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart, and bids it break.

Shakespeare.

He first whisper'd the man in the ear, that such a man should think such a card

Bacon.

The steward whisper'd the young Templar, that's true to my knowledge.

Laurel.

2. To utter in a low voice.

You have heard of the news abroad, I mean the whispered ones, for they are yet but ear-kolour arguments.

Shakespeare.

Sit and eat your bread,
Nor whisper more a word, or get ye gone,
And weep without doors.

Chapman.

They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and, tacitly withdrawing from the apollies, note
it about the city.

Bentley.

3. To prompt secretly.

Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
For 't was indeed his colour, but he came
To whisper Wolsey, here makes visitation.

Shakespeare.

WHISPER. n. f. [from the verb.] A low soft voice; cautious and timorous speech.

The extension is more in tones than in speech;
therefore the inward voice or whisper cannot give a tone.

Bacon.

Strictly observe the first hints and whiflers of good and evil that pass in the heart, and this will bring conscience quick and vigilant.

South.

Soft whiflers through th' assembly went.

Dryden.

He uncall'd, his patron to controul,
Divulg'd the secret whiflers of his soul.

Dryden.

With such like false whiflers, in former reigns,
the ears of princes have been poisoned.

Davenant.

WHISPERER. n. f. [from whisper.]

1. One that speaks low.

2. A private talker; a teller of secrets; a conveyer of intelligence.

Kings trust in eunuchs hath rather been as to good spies and good whiflers than good magistrates.

Bacon.

[This word is called by Skinner, who misdoth err, an interjection commanding silence, and so it is commonly used; but Shakespeare uses it as a verb, and Milton as an adjective or a participle.]

3. Are silent.

Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands;
Cort'ied when you have, and lift,
The wild waves whiff.

Shakespeare.

2. Still; silent; put to silence.

The winds, with wonder whiff,
Smoothly the waters kiss'd.

Milton.

Whispering new joys to the mild ocean.

3. Be still.

WHIST. n. f. A game at cards, requiring close attention and silence; vulgarly pronounced chift.

The clergyman us'd to play at whiff and twobbers.

Swift.

WHISTLE. v. a. To whistle.

Walls his grave round, beneath a cloud of smoke
We us'd to grant from the pipe

Thomson.

To WHISTLE. v. n. [hip-tlan, Saxon;
whisto, Latin.]

1. To form a kind of musical sound by an articulate modulation of the breath.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard.
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle.

Shakespeare.

Let one whistle at the one end of a trunk, and hold your ear at the other, and the sound shall strike so sharp as you can scarce endure it.

Bacon.

While the plowman near at hand
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land.

Milton.

Should Bertran found his trumpets,
And Fortinboud whiff through his fingers,
He draws his army off.

Dryden.

He whiff'd as he went for want of thought.

Dryden.

The plowman leaves the talk of day,
And trudging homeward whiffles on the way.

Gay.

2. To make a sound with a small wind instrument.

3. To sound shrill.

His big manly voice
Changing again toward childlike pipe,

Shakespeare.

He whiffles in his sound
Soft whiflers run along the leafy woods,
And mountains whiffle to the murm'ring floods.

Dryden.

Rhetus from the hearth a burning brand
Selects, and whirling waves, till from his hand
The fire took flame, then dash'd it from the right
On tan Chanax's temple, near the light
Then whiffles past came on.

Dryden.

When wings of death in whiffing arrows fly,
Wilt thou, though wounded, yet undaunted stay,
Perform thy part, and share the dangerous day?

Prior.

The wild winds whiffle, and the billows roar,
The splitting raft the furious upstir'd sea.

Pope.

To WHISTLE. v. a. To call by a whistle.

Let him whistle them backwards and forwards, till he is weary

South.

He chanced to miss his dog; we stood full till he had whiffled him up

Addison.

When humble pride for flattery makes demands,
May dance by dance be whiffled off my hands!

Pope.

WHISTLE. n. f. [hip-tle, Saxon.]

1. Sound made by the modulation of the breath in the mouth.

My fire in caves confirms the wind,
Can with a breath their clam'rous rage appease;
They fear his whistle, and forsake the seas.

Dryden.

2. A sound made by a small wind instrument.

3. The mouth; the organ of whifling.

Let's drink the other cup to wet our whifles, and to sing away all sad thoughts.

Watson.

4. A small wind instrument.

The masters and pilots were so astonished, that they knew not how to direct, and if they knew, they could scarcely, when they directed, hear their own whistle.

Sidney.

Behold
Upon the hempen tackle shipboys climbing;
Hear the thrill whistle, which doth order give
To founds confused.

Shakespeare.

Snuff whiffles, or shepherds' oaten pipes, give a found, because of their extreme loudness, when by the air is more pent than in a wider pipe. Bacon.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew,
The bells she ginged, and the whistle blew.

Pope.

5. The noise of winds.

6. A call, such as sportsmen use to their dogs.

Madam, here comes my lord.—
—I have been worth the whistle.

Shakespeare.

The knight, pursuing this epistle,
Believ'd he'd brought her to his whistle.

Hudibras

WHISTLER. n. f. [from whistle.] One who whistles.

The prize was a guinea, to be conferred upon the ablest whistler, who could whistle clearly, and so through his tune without laughing.

Addison.

WHIT. n. f. [pilt, a thing; apilt, any thing, Saxon.] A point; a jot.

We love, and are not whetted.

Shakespeare.

Her sacred book with blood yew'd,
That none could read except the did him teach,
She unto him disclosed every whit,
And heavenly documents thereof did preach.

Shakespeare.

The motive cause of doing it is not in world, but in the air; we no whit furthering that whereby we are driven.

Hobbes.

Although the lord became the king's tenant, his country was no whit reformed thereby, but remained in the former barbarism.

Bacon.

Nature's full blessings would be well dispos'd
In unsuperfluous, even proportion.

Milton.

And the whit encounter'd with her floor.

Milton.

It does not me a whit displease,
That the rich all honours seize.

Caesar.

In accounts of ancient times, it ought to be any enquirer, if they can be brought any whit one another.

Isaac.

It is every whit as honourable to admit a great number, as to oppose a bad one.

Addison.

WHIT. adj. [hip, Saxon; wit, Dutch.]

1. Having such an appearance as arises from the mixture of all colours; grey.

When the paper was held near to any colour than to the rest, it appeared of that colour to which it approach'd nearest, but when it was equally almost equally distant from all the colours, either it might be equally illuminated by them all, or appear'd white.

Newton.

Why round our coaches crowd the white glow-worms?

Pope.

2. Having the colour of fear; pale.

My hands are of your colour, but I flame
To wear a heart to white.

Shakespeare.

3. Having the colour appropriated to happiness and innocence.

Welcome, pure-eyed faith, white-handed hope,
Thou have rag angel girl with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of charity.

Milton.

Wert thou that sweet smiling youth?

Swift.

Or that crown'd matron large, white-robed?

Milton.

Let this auspicious morning be express'd
With a white stone dilmun'd from the rest,
Whites thy name, and as thy honour clear,
And let new joys attend on thy new-added year.

Dryden.

To tedious mirth be this white hour assign'd,
And sweet discourse, the banquet of the mind.

Pope.

Peace o'er the world her olive wand extend,
And white-rob'd innocence from heav'n descend.

Pope.

4. Gray with age.

I call you fervid ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high-engender'd battles 'gainst a head
So old and white as this.

Shakespeare.

So minutes, hours, and days, weeks, months, and years,
Past over, to the end they were created,
Would bring white to a quiet grave.

Shakespeare.

5. Pure; unblemish'd.

Unhappy Dryden in all Charles's days,
Rofcommon only boasts unpotted lays.

Shakespeare.

And in our own, excuse some courtly lies,
No whiter page than Addison's remains.

Pope.

WHITE. n. f.

1. Whiteness; any thing white; white colour.

My Nan shall be the queen of all the fannies,
Finely attired in a robe of white. Shakespeare
A friend coming to visit me, I stopped him at the door, and before I told him what the colours were, or what I was doing, I asked him which of the two whites were the best, and wherein they differed;
and after he had at that distance viewed them well, he answered, that they were both good whites, and that he could not say which was best, nor wherein their colours differed. Newton

2. The mark at which an arrow is shot, which used to be painted white.

It is a mark be set up for an archer at a great distance, let him aim as exactly as he can, the leading shall take his arrow, and direct it from the white. Dryden

Remove him, then, and all your plots fly fast,
Point blank, and level to the very white
Of your delights. Southern

3. The albuginous part of an egg.

It fetch some flux and whites of eggs
I apply to 's bleeding face. Shakespeare
The strongest repellents are the whites of new-laid eggs beaten to a froth with alum. Hogman

When fates among the stars do grow,
Thou into the close mists of time dost creep;
And there, with piercing eye,
Through the firm shell and the thick white dost spy

Years to come a-forming be,
Close in their sacred fecundine asleep. Colley

What principle manages the white and yolk of an egg into such a variety of textures, as is requisite to fashion a chick? Boyle

The two in most regions represent the yolk and the membrane that lies next above it, for the exterior region of the earth is the shell of the egg, and the abyss under it as the white that lies under the shell. Euclid

4. The white part of the eye.

Our general humilit
Sanctifies himself with 's hands,
And turns up th' white w' th' eye to his discourse. Shakespeare

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superiour with the white of the eye, but riseth up, as a hillcock, above its convexity.
Boyle

To WHITE. *v. a. [from the adjective.]

To make white; to dealbate; to whitewash.

His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow, so as no fuller on earth can white them.
Mack

Lie unto *white*d sepulchres, which appear beatiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones. Matthew

WHITELAND. n. f.

White-lead is made by taking sheet-lead, and having cut it into long and narrow slips, they make it up into rolls, but so that a small distance may remain between every spiral revolution. These rolls are put into earthen pots, so ordered that the lead may not lye down above half way, or some small matter more, in them; these pots have each of them very sharp vinegar in the bottom, so full as almost to touch the lead. When the vinegar and lead have both been put into the pot, it is covered up close, and is left for a certain time, in which space the corrosive fumes of the vinegar will reduce the surface of the lead into a mere white calx, which they separate by knocking it with a hammer. There are two sorts of this fold of the colour shops; the one called crude, which is the most pure part, and the other is called white-lead. Quincy

WHITELIVERED. adj. [from white and liver.] Envious; malicious; cowardly.

WHITELY. adj. [from white.] Coming near to white.

A whitely wanton, with a velvet brow,
With two pitch balls stuck in her face for eyes.
Shakespeare

Now, governor, I see that I must bluth
Quite through this veil of night a whitely flame,
To think I could design to make those free
Who were by nature slaves. Southern

WHITMEAT. n. f. [from white and meat.] Food made of milk.

Much saltmeats in whitmeat is ill for the stone.

To WHITEN. *v. a. [from white.] To make white.

The fumes of sulphur will not blacken paper, and is commonly used by women to whiten their faces. Brown

Flax the soil and climate are proper for whitening, by the frequency of brooks, and also of winds.
Temple

Women of my complexion ought to be more modest, especially since our faces declare us from all artificial whitenings. Guarison

Striking her chin, the form confirms her pow'r,
The axes but whiten her triumphant throat. Prior

Whether the darken'd room to mute make,
Or whiten'd wall provide the sower to write;
In distance, exile, Pedium, or the most,
Like Lee or Budget, I will rhyme and print. Pope

To WHITEN. *v. n. To grow white.

The bark expects its freight;
The loosen'd canvas trembles with the wind,
And the sea whitens with auspicious gales. Smith

WHITENER. n. f. [from whiten.] One who makes any thing white

WHITENESS. n. f. [from white.]

1. The state of being white; freedom from colour.

This doth lead me to her hand,
Of my first love the fatal band,
While whiteness doth for ever sit,
Nature herself cannot find it. Sidney

Whiteness is a mean between all colours, having disposed itself indifferently to them all, so with equal facility to be tinged with any of them.
Newton

2. Paleness.

Thou tremblest, and the whiteness of thy cheek
Is sadder than thy tongue to tell thy errand. Shaksp.

3. Purity; cleanness.

The least spot is visible on crime. But to preserve this whiteness in its original purity, you have little that enquire, forsake the common track of business, which is not always to be in. Dryden

WHITFOR. n. f. A kind of food.

Cornwall squab-pye, and Devon whitpot brings.

Whether of them should be the lord of lords. Spenser

At Canterbury, whither some voice was run on before, the mayor seized on them, as they were taking fresh horses. Hutton

That lord advanced to Winchester, whither Sir John Berkley brought him two regiments more of foot. Clarendon

4. To what degree? Obsolete; perhaps never in use.

Whither at length wilt thou abuse our patience?
Still shall thy fury mock us? Ben Jonson

WHITHERSOEVER. adv. [from whither and soever.] To whatever place.

For whatever end faith is designed, and whither fides, the nature and intuition of the grace does drive us, whither we must go, and to that end we must direct all our actions. Taylor

Why. adv. [hi, ponhi, Saxon.]

1. For what reason? interrogatively.

If it be lawful to support the faith of the church against an irrecusable party, why not the government and discipline of the church?

The / both deal justly with you: why not from any regard they have for justice, but because their fortune depends on their credit.

Why he should mean me ill.

Such, whose sole bliss is eating; who can give But that one brutal reason why they live.

3. For what reason? relatively.

I was dispatch'd for their defence and guard, And listen why, for I will tell you now.

We examine the why, the what, and the how of things.

Turn the discourse; I have a reason why I would not have you speak so tenderly.

4. It is sometimes used emphatically.

Nims' tomb, man; why, you must not speak that yet: that you answer to Pyram.

You have not been asked then? Why, no; the day had broke before we parted.

If her chill heart I cannot move, Why I'll enjoy the very love.

Whence is this? why, from that essential sustenance which obedience has to the relation which is between a rational creature and his Creator.

Why not. adv. A cant word for violent or peremptory procedure.

Capoc'h'd your rabbins of the synod, And snapp'd their canons with a whynot.

Wl. [Saxon.] Holy. Thus wimund, holy peace; wibert, eminent for sanctity; alwi, altogether holy; as Hierocles, Hieronymus, Hosius, &c.

Wic, Wick, comes from the Saxon wic, which, according to the different nature and condition of places, hath a threefold signification; implying either a village, or a lay made by the winding banks of a river, or a cattle.

Wick. n. f. [peoce, Sax. wicke, Dut.] The substance round which is applied the wax or tallow of a torch or candle.

But true it is, that when the oil is spent The light goes out, and wick is thrown away;

So, when he had resign'd his regiment, His daughter 'gan despise his drooping day.

There lives within the very flame of love A kind of wick or fuel that will abate it.

Bodies are inflamed wholly and immediately, without any wick to help the inflammation.

Little atoms of oil or melted wax continually ascend space up the wick of a burning candle.

The fungous parcels about the wicks of candles only signify a moist and pluvial air about them.

Wicked. adj. [Of this common word the etymology is very obscure: picca, is an exchanter; paccan, is to oppress; piman, to curse; picad, is crooked; all these, however, Skinner rejects for vitiat, Latin. Perhaps it is a compound of pic, vile, bad, and head; malum caput.]

Given to vice; not good; flagitious; morally bad.

The dwelling place of the wicked shall come to nought.

And as the better spirit, when the wicked is a scorn of death, dath show the wicked soul.

So when the wicked soul dath show the wicked soul, Ev'n then she proves her own eternity.

He of their wicked ways shall them admonish.

But since thy veins paternal virtue flows, Go and force'd! the rivals aims despise;

For never, never wicked man was vile.

2. For which reason: relatively.

In every sin, men must not consider the unlawfulness thereof only, but the reason why it should be unlawful.

Mortar will not have attained its utmost compactness till fourscore years after it has been employed, and this is one reason why, in demolishing ancient fabrics, it is more easy to break the stone than the mortar.

No ground of enmity

Why he should mean me ill.

Such, whose sole bliss is eating; who can give But that one brutal reason why they live.

3. For what reason: relatively.

I was dispatch'd for their defence and guard, And listen why, for I will tell you now.

6 K 2

W I D

1. It is a word of ludicrous or slight blame.

That same wicked bastard of Venus, that blind rascally boy, that abuses every one's eyes because his own are out, let him be judge how deep I am in love. Shakespeare.

3. Cursed; baneful; pernicious; bad in effect, as medicinal things are called virtuous.

The wicked weed which there the fox did lay. From underneath his head he took away! Spenser.
As wicked dew as e'er my mother breath'd
With raven's feather from unwholesome fen,
Drop on you both. Shakespeare.

WICKEDLY. adv. [from wicked.] Criminally; corruptly; badly.

I would now send him where they all should see,
Clear as the light, his heart flame; where no man
Could be so wickedly or fondly stupid,
But should cry out, lo! law, touch'd, felt wickedness.

And grasp'd it. Ben Jonson.

He behaved himself with great modesty and wonderful repentance; being convinced in his conscience that he had done wickedly. Clarendon.

That thou may'st be the better being about

Thy wishes, thou art wickedly devout. Dryden.

'Tis phrase absurd to call a villain great:

Who wickedly is wise or madly brave,

Is but the more a fool, the more a knave. Pope.

WICKEDNESS. n. f. [from wicked.] Corruption of manners; guilt; moral ill.

It is not good that children should know any wickedness; old folks have discretion and know the world. Shakespeare.

These tents thou saw'st so pleasant, were the tents

Of wickedness; wherein shall dwell his race

Who slew his brother. Milton.

WICKER. adj. [vigre, a twig, Danish; twiggen, Dutch.] Made of small sticks.

Each one a little wicker basket had,

Made of fine twigs entangled curiously,

In which they gather'd flowers. Spenser.

Then quick did drofs

His halfe milke up for cheere, and in a presse

Of wicker prest it. Chapman.

The long broad shields, made up of wicker rods, which are commonly used among the northern Irish, but especially among the Scots, are brought from the Scythians. Spenser.

If your influence be quite damn'd up

With black usurping mist, some gentle taper,

Though a rush candle from the wicker hole

Of some clay habitation, visit us

With thy long-levell'd rule of streaming light. Milton.

A foolish painter drew January sitting in a wicker chair, with four nightcaps on, by the fire; and without doors green trees, as if it had been in the midst of July. Percy.

WICKET. n. f. [wicked, Welsh; guight, Fr. wicket, Dutch.] A small gate.

When none yielded, her unruly page

With his rude claws the wicket open rent,

And let her in. Spenser.

These wickets of the soul are plac'd on high,

Because all sounds do lightly mount aloft. Davies.

Now St. Peter at heav'n's wicket seems

To wait them with his keys. Milton.

The cave was now a common way;

The wicket, often open'd, knew the key. Dryden.

The chattering with dissenters, and dodging about this or the other ceremony, is like opening a few wickets, by which no more than one can pass

in at a time. South.

WIDE. adj. [pibe, Saxon; mid, Dutch.]

2. Broad; extended far each way.

He found that pasture, and the land was wide and good. 1 Chronicles.

He wand'ring long a wider circle made,

And many-langw'd nations he survey'd. Pope.

3. Broad to a certain degree: as, three inches wide.

4. Deviating; remote.

Many of the fathers were far wide from the understanding of this place. Raleigh.

Consider the absurdities of that distinction between the act and the obliquity; and the contrary being so wide from the truth of scripture and the attributes of God, and so noxious to good life, we may certainly conclude, that to the perpetration of whatsoever sin there is not at all any predestination of God. Hammond.

To move

His laughter at their quaint opinions wide. Milton.

On wide of nature must he act a part,

Make love in tropes, in bombast break his heart. Tickle.

WIDE. adv.

1. At a distance. In this sense wide seems to be sometimes an adverb.

A little wide

There was a holy chapel edified,

Whom the hermit went to lay

His holy things each morn and even tide. Spenser.

The Chinese, a people whose way of thinking seems to be as wide of ours in Europe as their country does. Temple.

2. With great extent.

Of all these bounds enrich'd

With plentiful rivers, and wide fertile meads,

We make thee lady. Shakespeare.

On the east side of the garden place

Cherubic watch, and of a sword the flame

Wide-waving; all approach far off to fright. Milton.

She open'd, but to shut

Excell'd her pow'r, the gates wide open flood. Milton.

With huge two-handed sway

Brandish'd aloft, the horn'd edge came down, Milton.

Wide waiving

The south wind rose, and with black wings

Wide hovering, all the clouds together drove

From under heav'n. Milton.

Stretch'd at ease the panting lady lies,

To shun the fervour of meridian fires;

While sweating slaves catch ev'ry breeze of air,

And with wide-spreading fans refresh the fair. Gay.

Yet wide was spread their fame in ages past,

And poets once had promis'd they should last. Pope.

WIDELY. adv. [from wide.]

1. With great extent each way.

Any that considers how infinite the intervals of the chaos are, in proportion to the bulk of the atoms, will hardly induce himself to believe, that particles so widely disseminated could ever throng

one another to a compact texture. Bentley.

2. Remotely; far.

Let him exercise the freedom of his reason, and his mind will be strengthened, and the light which the remote parts of truth will give to one another, will to assist his judgment, that he will seldom be widely out. Locke.

TO WIDEN. v. a. [from wide.] To make wide; to extend.

So now the gates are open; now prove good seconds;

'Tis for the followers fortune widens them, Shakespeare.

Not for the flyers.

These accidents, when they first happen, seem but small and contemptible; but by degrees they branch out and widen themselves into a numerous train of mischievous consequences. South.

He was accustomed to sleep with a peaceable nose, fastening in his slumbers the wrinkles of it, and the anger which commonly mounted to that part; but now his nostrils were widened to the last degree of fury. Dryden.

TO WIDEN. v. n. To grow wide; to extend itself.

It is in this that the species of brutes are discriminated from man, and that proper difference wherein they are wholly separated, and which at last widens to so vast a distance. Locke.

With her the temple ev'ry moment grew,

Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,

And arches widen, and long aisles extend. Pope.

WIDENESS. n. f. [from wide.]

1. Breadth; large extent each way.

The rugged hair began to fall away;

The twinkles of her eyes did only stay, Milton.

Though not so large; and
The wideness of her jaws

2. Comparative breadth.

Within the same annual time, the number of the earth is carried above fifty times as far round the orbis magnus, whose wideness we now assume to be twenty thousand terrestrial diameters. Bentley.

WIDGEON. n. f. A waterfowl, not unlike a wild duck, but not so large.

Among the first sort we reckon creykens, curlews, and widgeons. Curre.

WIDOW. n. f. [pibpa, Saxon; weduwe,

Dutch; weddu, Welsh; vidua, Latin.]

A woman whose husband is dead.

To take the widow,

Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril. Shakespeare.

Catharine no more

Shall be call'd queen; but princess dowager,

And widow to prince Arthur. Shakespeare.

Our fatherless distress was left unmann'd,

Your widow-dolours likewise be unwept. Shakespeare.

And will the yet debate her eyes on me,

That crop the golden prime of this sweet prince,

And made her widow to a woful bed? Shakespeare.

And you, fair widow, who stay here alive,

Since he to much rejoices, cease to grieve;

Your joys and pains were wont the time to be,

Begin not now, blest pair! to disagree. Cowley.

The barren they more miserable make,

And from the widow, all her comfort take. Sandys.

He warns the widow, and her household gods,

To seek a refuge in remote abodes. Dryden.

Who has the paternal power whilst the widow queen is with child? Locke.

TO WIDOW. v. a. [from widow.]

1. To deprive of a husband.

In this city he

Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,

Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakespeare.

You are beguil'd,

Both you and I, for Romeo is call'd;

He made you for a highway to my bed;

But I, a maid, the maiden widow'd. Shakespeare.

Thy little care to mend my widow'd nights,

Has forc'd me to recourte of marriage rites,

To fill an empty side. Dryden.

2. To endow with a widow-right.

For his possessions,

Although by confiscation they are ours,

We do infuse and widow you withal,

To buy you a better husband. Shakespeare.

3. To strip of any thing good.

The widow'd ale in mourning

Dries up her tears. Dryden.

Inclement weather and frosty blasts deface

The bathetic year, trees of their flourish'd leaves

Are widow'd, dreary forms o'er all prevail. Philips.

WIDOWER. n. f. [from widow.] One who has lost his wife.

The king, sealing up all thoughts of love under the image of her memory, remained a widower

many years after. Shakespeare.

The man consents are had, and here we'll stay

To see our widower's second marriage day. Shakespeare.

They that marry, as they that shall get no children; and they that marry not, as the widower. 2 1 John.

WIDOWHOOD. n. f. [from widow.]

1. The state of a widow.

Cecropia, having in her widowhood taken the young Anaxia into her charge, had taught her to think that there is no widowhood but in including both heaven and earth in one's self. Shakespeare.

We were my right with strength adown to tread,

Through weakness of my widowhood us woe. Spenser.

For truth is strong.

She employed her left widowhood to works no less bountiful than a stable. Carew.

It is of great consequence to be content to leave nothing to be desired, as the single life preferably much before widowhood. Watson.

Church thy barren widowhood with the quick

Of matrimonial reason: so farewell. Milton.

widow. Not in use.

I'll assure her of
Her husband, be it that she survives me,
In all my lands. Shakespeare.

WIDOWHUNTER. n. f. [widow and hunter.] One who courts widows for a jointure.

The widowhunters about town often afford them great diversion. Addison.

WIDOWMAKER. n. f. [widow and maker.] One who deprives women of their husbands.

It grieves my soul
That I must draw this metal from my side
To be a widowmaker. Shakespeare.

plaint. Milton.

WIDTH. n. f. [from wide.] Breadth;
wideness. A low word.

For the width of the mortar's gage this side, then for the tenant gage on that end of the quarter you intend the tenant shall be made. Mason.

Let thy vines in intervals be set;
Indulge their width, and add a rosy space,
That their extremest lines may scarce embrace. Dryden.

WIELD. v. a. [pealban, Saxon, to manage in the hand.]

1. To use with full command, as a thing not too heavy for the holder.

His looks are full of peaceful majesty,
His head by nature fram'd to wear a crown,
His hand to wield a scepter, and himself
Likely in time to bless a regal throne. Shakespeare.

'Mongst forests, hills, and floods, was ne'er such heave and move,

Since Albion wail'd arms against the son of Jove
There is that hand bolden'd to blood and war,
That must the sword in wondrous actions wield. Dryden.

They are in the dark before they are aware, and then they make at note only with terms; which,
like too heavy weapons that they cannot wield, carry their thrusts beyond their aim. Dryden.

The least of whom could wield
These elements, and arm him with the force
Of all their regions. Milton.

Part wield their arms, part curb the foaming flood.

His Rome's great senate could not wield that sword,
Which of the conquer'd world had made him
lord;

What hope had ours, while yet their power was new,

To rule victorious armies, but by you? Milton.

Or war his armour, or sustain his shield. Dryden.

2. To handle: in an ironical sense.

Bast Hungarian wight, wilt thou the tug of wight wield? Shakespeare.

WIELDY. adj. [from wield.] Manage-able.

WIERY. adj. [from wire.]

1. Made of wire: it were better written wiry.

Er'n to that drop ten thousand wery friends
Do glew themselves in. Shakespeare.

WIRE. n. f. plural wires, [wip, Sax. wif,
Dutch.]

1. A woman that has a husband.

There's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare.

The kings of Spain have been used to say, that they loved the East Indies for their mistresses only, in whose favours they could patiently enough endure a rival; but esteemed America as their wife, in whose love they could not brook a competitor without foul dishonour. Heylin.

The wife, where danger or dishonour lurks,
Safest and firmest by her husband stays. Milton.

The wife her husband murders, he the wife. Dryden.

Fond of his friend, and civil to his wife. Pope.

With wings more momentary swift than thought. Shakespeare.

This world below did need one wight,
Which might thereof distinguish every part. Dante.

This meaner wights, of trust and credit bare,
Not to respected, could not look t' effect. Dante.

A night he was, whose very light would Enoble him mirror of knight-hood. Hudibras.

The water thins all taint of living wight. Milton.

How couldst thou suffer thy devoted knight,
On thy own day, to fall by his oppress'd,
The wight of all the world who lov'd thee best? Dryden.

His station he yielded up to a wight as disagreeable as himself. Addison.

In fancy's full bloom lies Florio down at night,
And wiles about dry a most glorious wight.

The tump's dead. Young.

WIGHT. adj. Swift; nimble. Out of use.

He was so wight and so wight,
From bright to bright he leaped light,
And out the punies latched. Spenser.

As they say spirits do, at midnight, have
In them a wilder nature than the business
That seeks dispatch by day. Shakespeare.

Though the foundation destroyed man and beast generally, yet some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.

When they might not converse with any civil men without peril of their lives, whither should they fly but into the woods and mountains, and there live in a wild and barbarous manner. Dante.

May those already curst Essexian plains,
Where hasty death and pining sickness reigns,
Prove as a desert, and none there make stay
But savage beasts, or men as wild as they. Waller.

5. Turbulent; tempestuous; irregular.

His passions and his virtues lie confus'd,
And mix together in so wild a tumult,
That the whole man is quite disfigur'd in him. Addison.

6. Licentious; ungoverned.

The barbarous dissonance
Of that wild rout that tore the Thracian bard. Milton.

Valour grown wild by pride, and pow'r by rage,
Did the true charms of majesty impair:

Rome by degrees advancing more in age,
Shew'd sad remains of what had once been fair. Prior.

7. Inconstant; mutable; fickle.

In the ruling passion, there alone,
The wild are constant, and the cunning known. Pope.

8. Inordinate; loose.

Other bars he lays before me,
My riots pull my wild tortures. Shakespeare.

Besides, thou art a beau, what's that my child?
A top well dress'd, extravagant, and wild:

She that craves her thus has it impertinence,
And in her calling more of common sense. Dryden.

9. Uncouth; strange.

What are these,
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants of th' earth,
And yet are on't? Shakespeare.

10. Done or made without any consistent order or plan.

With mountains as with weapons arm'd, they make Wild work in heav'n. Milton.

The sea was very necessary to the ends of providence, and it would have been a very wild world had it been without. Woodward.

11. Merely imaginary.

As universal as these appear to be, an effectual remedy might be applied. I am not at present upon a wild speculative project, but turn a due as may be easily put in execution. Swift.

WILD. n. f. [from the adjective.] A desert; a tract uncultivated and uninhab-ited.

Whereas the scorching sky
Doth singe the sandy wilds of spacious Barbary. Dryden.

We sometimes,
Who dwell the wild, constrain'd by want come
To town or village night. Milton.

This gentle knight
Forsook his easy couch at early day,
And to the woods and wilds pursued his way. Dryden.

Then Lybia first, of all her moisture drain'd,
Became a barren waste, a wild of sand. Addison.

Is there a nation in the wilds of Africa,
Amidst the barren rocks and burning sands,
That does not tremble at the Roman name? Addison.

You rais'd these hallow'd walls; the desert
smil'd,

And paradise was open'd in the wild. Pope.

WILD Basil. n. f. [acinus, Lat.] A plant.

Miller.

WILD Cucumber. n. f. [elaterium, Lat.] A plant.

He travell'd through wide wasteful ground,
That nought but desert wilderness shew'd all around. Spenser.

When as the land she saw no more appear,
But a wild wilderness of waters deep,
Then 'gan she greatly to lament and weep. Spenser.

O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
When that my care could not withhold thy riots,
What wilt thou do when not is thy care?
O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants! Shakspere.

But who can always on the billows lie?
The wat'ry wilderness yields no supply. Waller.
All those animals have been obliged to change their woods and wildernesses for lodgings in cities.
Arbutnot and Pope.

2. The state of being wild or disorderly.
Not in use.

The paths and how'rs doubt not but our joint hands

Will keep from wilderness with ease. Milton.

WILDFIRE. n. f. [wild and fire.] A composition of inflammable materials, easy to take fire, and hard to be extinguished.

When thou rain'st up, Godhill in the night to catch my horse, I did think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus, or a ball of wildfire. Shakspere.

Though brimstone, pitch, wildfire, burn equally, and are hard to quench, yet they make no such fiery wind as gunpowder. Bacon.

Yet shall it in his boiling stomach turn
To bitter poison, and like wildfire burn;
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd. Sandys.

No matter in the world so proper to write with as wildfire, as no characters can be more legible than those which are read by their own light. Addison.

In flames, like Semel's, he brought to bed,
While opening hell spouts wildfire at your head. Pope.

WILDGOOSECHASE. n. f. A pursuit of something as unlikely to be caught as the wild goose.

If our wildgoosechase, I have done;
for thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole life. Shakspere.

Let a man consider the time, money, and vexation, that this wildgoosechase has cost him, and then say, what have I gotten to answer all this expence, but giddy frolic? L'Estrange.

WILDLING. n. f. [wildelinghe, Dutch.] A wild four apple.

Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tip-toes, reaching from the ground. Dryden.

The red streak, of all cyder fruit, hath obtained the preference, being but a kind of wilding, never pleasing to the palate. Mortimer.

The wildings's fibres are contriv'd
To draw th' earth's purest spirit, and resist its ferulence. Philips.

WILDLY. adv. [from wild.]

He is giv'n
To sports, to wildness, and much company. Shakspere.

3. Savageness; brutality.

He came in like a wild man, but such a wildness as shew'd his eye-sight had tamed him; full of withered leaves, which, though they fell not, still threaten'd falling. Sidney.

4. Ferity; the state of an animal untamed;
contrary to tameness.

5. Uncultivated state.

Their wildness lose, and quitting nature's part,
Obey the rules and discipline of art. Dryden.

6. Deviation from a settled course; irregularity.

A delirium is but a short wildness of the imagination; a settled irregularity of fancy is distraction and madness. Watts.

7. Alienation of mind.

Ophelia, I wish
That your good beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlet's wildness; so shall I hope your virtues
May bring him to his wonted way again. Shakspere.

A plant. Miller.

WILE. n. f. [pile, Saxon; wiel, Islandick.]

A deceit; a fraud; a trick; a strata-gem; a practice artful, sly, and insidious.

Their leader by his wiles had much obtain'd,
And done much mischief on the English state. Dryden.

My sentence is for open war,
More unexpert, I boast not; yet
Contrive who need.

Life essay'd the surest wile,
Gilding itself with Laura's smile. Ragoommon.

So Sforza, curs'd with a too fertile brain,
Lost by his wiles the pow'r his wit did gain. Dryden.

The head of man is so full of wiles, artifices, and deceit, there is no guessing at what he is from his speeches. Addison.

Wisdom's above suspecting wiles,
The queen of learning gravely smiles. Swift.

WILFUL. adj. [will and full.]

1. Stubborn; contumacious; perverse; inflexible.

The wilful never want woe. Proverbs.

2. Done or suffered by design.

Stenobea herself did choak
With wilful cord, for wanting of her will. Spenser.

Thou to me

Art all things under heav'n, all places thou,
Who for my wilful crime art banish'd hence. Milton.

The silent stranger stood amaz'd to see Contempt of wealth, and wilful poverty. Dryden.

By chance he ancient amities forgot,
Or else expung'd them with one wilful blot;
Nor knew he God nor man, nor faith, nor friends,
But for-purposes and worldly ends. Ilave.

WILFULLY. adv. [from wilful.]

1. Obstinate; stubbornly.

The mother, who being determinately, lest I should say of a great lady wilfully, bent to marry her to Demagoras, tried all ways which a witty and hard-hearted mother could devise. Sidney.

Evil could he conceal her fire, and wilfully perfected her in it. Sidney.

Religion is matter of our freest choice; and it men will obstinately and wilfully set themselves against it, there is no remedy. Tillotson.

2. By design; on purpose.

That will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, through all difficulties. Hammond.

If you do not wilfully pass over any of your greater offences, but confess particularly, and repent terribly, of them, God will more easily pass by your lesser infirmities. Bishop Taylor.

This let him know;

Left, wilfully offending, he pretend Surprisal. Milton.

WILFULNESS. n. f. [from wilful.] Obstinacy; stubbornness; perverseness.

So full of wilfulness and self-liking is our nature, that without some definitive sentence, which, being given, may stand, small hope there is that strife will end. Hooker.

Thy causeless ruth repress;
He that his sorrow fought through wilfulness,
And his too tender'd would release again,
Deserves to taste his folly's fruit. Spenser.

Never hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shakspere.

Sins of presumption are such as proceed from pride, arrogance, wilfulness, and haughtiness of man's heart. Perkins.

A stiff and stubborn obstinacy is not so much firmness and resolution, as wilfulness. L'Estrange.

That is not hastily to be interpreted obstinacy or wilfulness, which is the natural product of their age. Locke.

WILLY. adv. [from wily.] By strata-gem; fraudulently.

They did work willy, and went and made as if they had been ambassadors. Joshua.

WILINESS. n. f. [from wily.] Cunning; guile.

of art, and wiliness of art. Howell.

WILL. n. f. [will, Saxon; wille, Dutch.]

1. That power by which we desire and purpose; volition.

will naturally, under this corrupt state, I do not confider. Hammond.
The will cannot be constrained. Perkins.

Two principal fountains there are of human actions, knowledge and will; which will, in things tending towards any end, is termed choice. Hooker.

2. Choice; arbitrary determination.

Will is the power which the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it, or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, and vice versa. Locke.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,

To be so cruel to an humble foe?

If nature, then she may it mend with skill;

If will, then she at will may will forego. Spenser.

These things have a show of wisdom in will, wisdom and humility. Coffinius.

Will holds the scepter in the soul,

And on the passions of the heart doth reign. Davies.

The truth is, such a man understands by his will, and believes a thing true or false, merely as it agrees or disagrees with a violent inclination; and therefore, whilst that inclination lasts in its strength, he discovers nothing of the different degrees of evidence. Atterbury.

3. Discretion; choice.

Religion was observed in the beginning of the world, before there were civil laws amongst them; I mean any other than the mere wills of their princes and governors. Wilkins.

Go, then, the guilty at thy will chastise. Pope.

4. Command; direction.

At his first sight the mountains are shaken, and at his will the south wind bloweth. Ecclesiastes.

Our prayers should be according to the will of God; they should have nothing in them but what is wise, and holy, and heavenly. Law.

5. Disposition; inclination; desire.

I make bold to press upon you with so little preparation.

—You're welcome; what's your will? Shakespeare.

He hath a will, he hath a power to perform. Drummond.

He said, and with so good a will to die Did to his breast the fatal point apply, It found his heart. Dryden.

6. Power; government.

Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies. Psalms.

He had his will of his maid before he could go; he had the mastery of his parents ever since he could prattle; and why, now he is grown up, must he be restrained? Locke.

7. Divine determination.

I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground. The wills above be done; but I would lain die a dry death. Shakespeare.

8. Testament; disposition of a dying man's effects.

Another branch of their revenue still Remains, beyond their boundless right to kill, Their father yet alive, impow'rd to make a will. Dryden.

Do men make their last wills by word of mouth only? Stephens.

Some preach Christ of envy, and some of good-will. Philippians.

11. Ill-will. Malice; malignity.

Will with a wisp. n. f. Jack with a lantern.

Will with the wisp is of a round figure, in figure like the flame of a candle; but sometimes broader, and like a bundle of twigs set on fire. It sometimes gives a brighter light than that of a wax-candle; at other times more obscure, and of a purple colour. When viewed from a distance, it shines less than at a distance. They wander about in the air, not far from the surface of the earth; and are more frequent in places that are marshy, mouldy, marshy, and abounding with reeds. They haunt burying-places, places of execution, and daughills. They commonly appear in summer and at the beginning of autumn, and are generally at the height of about six feet from the ground. Now they dilate themselves, and now contract; now they go on like waves, and rain as it were sparks of fire, but they burn nothing. They follow those that run away, and fly from those that follow them. Some that have been caught were observed to consist of a stinging, viscous, and gelatinous matter, like the spawn of frogs, not hot or burning, but only stinging; to that the matter seems to be phosphorus, prepared and raised from putrified plants, or exhaled by the heat of the sun; which is condensed by the cold of the evening, and then shines. Muschenbroek.

Will-a-wisp misleads night faring clowns O'er hills and sinking bogs. Gay.

To WILL. v. a. [willan, Gothick; willan, Saxon; willeu, Dutch.]

1. To desire that any thing should be, or be done; or not be, or not be done.

To will, is to bend our souls to the having or doing of that which they see to be good. Hooker.

Let Richard be reformed to his blood, As will the rest, to wretched Winchester. Shakespeare.

I speak not of God's determining his own will, but his predetermining the acts of our will. There is as great difference between these two, as betwixt my willing a lawful thing myself, and my inducing another man to do that which is unlawful. Hammond.

Whoever wills the doing of a thing, it the doing of it be in his power, he will certainly do it; and whoever does not do that thing which he has in his power to do, does not properly will it. South.

A man that fits full is said to be at liberty, because he can walk if he wills it. Locke.

2. To be inclined or resolved to have.

She's too rough for me; There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife? Shakespeare.

3. To command; to direct.

St. Paul did will them of Corinth, every man to lay up some what on the Sunday, and to reserve it in store for the church of Jerusalem, for the relief of the poor there. Hooker.

How rarely does it meet with this time's gate, When man was will'd to love his enemies? Shakespeare.

Our battle is more full of names than yours, Our men more perfect in the use of arms, Our armour's all as strong, our cause the best, Then reason wills our hearts should be as good. Shakespeare.

He wills him to be of good comfort, promising to bestow upon him whatsoever he should wish. Knollys.

If they had any business, his majesty wills that they should attend. Clarendon.

'Tis yours, O queen, to will The work which duty binds me to fulfill. Dryden.

4. It has a loose and slight signification.

Let the circumstances of his be what or where they will, a man should never neglect improvement. Watts.

5. It is one of the signs of the future tense, of which it is difficult to show or limit the signification.

I will come. I am determined to come: importing choice.

Thou wilt come. It must be so that thou must come, importing necessity; or, it shall be that thou shalt come, importing choice.

Will thou come? Hast thou determined to come? importing choice.

He will come. He is resolved to come; or, it must be that he must come: importing either choice or necessity.

It will come. It must so be that it must come: importing necessity.

The plural follows the analogy of the singular.

WILL and Will, among the English Saxons, as will at this day among the Germans, signified many. So Willelmus is the defender of many; Wifred, peace to many; which are answered in sense and signification by Polymachus, Polycrates, and Polyphilus. Gibson.

WILLING, adj. [from will.]

1. Inclined to any thing; consenting; not disposed to refuse.

Some other able, and as willing, pays The rigid satisfaction. Milton.

Can any man trust a better support, under affliction, than the friendship of Omnipotence, who is both able and willing, and knows how to relieve him? Bentley.

2. Pleased; desirous.

He, willing to please one in authority, forced all his skill to make the resemblance of the best fashion. Wisdome.

He stoop'd with weary wings and willing feet. Milton.

3. Favourable; well disposed to any thing.

As many as were willing-hearted brought bracelets and earrings. Exodus.

4. Ready; complying.

Religion hath force to qualify all sorts of men, to make governors the apter to rule with confidence, inferiors for confidence sake the willing to obey. Hooker.

We're willing daunces enough. Shakespeare.

5. Chosen.

They're held with his melodious harmony In willing chains and sweet captivity. Milton.

6. Spontaneous.

Forbear, if thou hast pity; These groans proceed not from a senseless plant, No founts of blood run willing from a tree. Dryden.

7. Consenting.

How can hearts not fire serve willing? Milton.

WILLINGLY, adv. [from will.]

1. With one's own consent; without dislike; without reluctance.

That preservation of peace and unity amongst christian churches should be by all good means procured, we join most willingly and gladly with them. Hooker.

I dare not make myself too guilty, To give up willingly that noble title Your master wed me to. Shakespeare.

This ransom, if my whole inheritance May compass it, shall willingly be paid. Milton.

2. By one's own desire.

The condition of that people is not so much to be envied, as some would willingly represent it. Addison.

WILLINGNESS, n. f. [from willing.] Consent; freedom from reluctance; ready compliance.

We praise the things we hear with much more willingness than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past, thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and overlaid by the other. Ben Jonson.

It is not doing good after that same wonderful manner, that Christ's example obligeth us unto, but to a like willingness and readiness to do good, as far as our power reacheth. Calamy.

Fear never yet a generous mind did gage; We yield on parley, but are storm'd in vain; Contraint, in all things, makes the pleasure less; Sweet is the love which comes with willingness. Dryden.

WILLOW. n. f. [salix, Sax. salix, Latin; gwilon, Welsh.] A tree worn by forlorn lovers.

It hath amentaceous flowers, consisting of several stamens, which are collected into a spike, but are barren. The embryos are produced upon different trees from the male flowers, and afterwards become a fruit or husk, shaped like a cone, opening in two parts, and containing downy seeds. Milner.

WIN

I offered him my company to a willow tree, to make him a garland, as being forsaken; to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipt.

Shakspeare.

In such a night
Stood Dido with a willow in her hand
Upon the wild sea banks.

Shakspeare.

Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I wear the willow garland for his sake.

Shakspeare.

When heaven's burning eye the fields invades,
To marshes he resorts; obtrud'd willow reeds,
And hoary willows which the moisture feeds.

Sandys.

Afflicted Israel shall sit weeping down,
Their harps upon the neighbouring willows hung,
No joyous hymn encouraging their tongue.

Prior.

WILLOWIAN. adj. [from willow.] Resembling the colour of willow.

Make his body with greenish coloured crewel, or willowish colour.

Miller.

WILY. adj. [from wile.] Cunning; sly; full of stratagem; fraudulent; invidious; subtle; mischievously artful.

They are so cautious and wily headed, especially being men of small practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilities and shifts.

Spenser.

In the wily snake
Whatever slights, none would suspicious mark,
As from his wit and native subtilty Proceeding.

Milton.

Since this false, wily, doubling disposition of mind is so intolerably mischievous to society, God is sometimes pleased, in mere compassion to men, to give them warning of it, by setting some odd mark upon such Causes.

South.

My wily nurse by long experience found,
And first discover'd to my soul its wound:
'Tis love said she.

Dryden.

WIMBLE. n. f. [wimpel, old Dutch, from wemelen, to bore.] An instrument with which holes are bored.

At harvest home, trembling to approach
The little barrel which he fears to brouch,
He flays the wimble, often draws it back,
And deals to thirsty servants but a smack.

Dryden.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble, some huge beam to bore;
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing till it scoops it out.

Pope.

The trepan is like a wimble used by joiners.

Sharp.

WIMBLY. adj. Active; nimble; shifting to and fro. Such seems to be the meaning here.

He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
And off the pommis latched:

Therewith afraid I ran away;
But he, that erst seem'd but to play,

A thrust in earnest snatched.

Spenser.

WIMPLE. n. f. [pepion, Latin.] A plant.

WIMPLE. n. f. [gumple, Fr.] A hood; a veil. It is printed in Spenser, perhaps by mistake, wimble.

So fair and fresh, as fairest flower in May,
For he had laid her mournful stole aside,
And widow-like had wimble thrown away.

Spenser.

The Lord will take away the changeable suits of apparel, and the wimples, and the crisping pins.

Lynd.

WIMPLE. v. a. To draw down as a hood or veil.

Under a wimpled head hide

WIN, whether initial or final, in the names of men, may either denote a masculine temper, from pin, which signifies in Saxon, war, strength, &c. or else the general love and esteem he hath among the people, from the Saxon pine, i. e. dear, beloved. In the names of places it implies a battle fought there.

Gibson.

Addison.

6. To gain by persuasion.

They win great numbers to receive

With joy the tidings brought from heav'n.

Milton.

7. To gain by courtship.

She's beautiful, and therefore to be woo'd;

She is a woman, therefore to be won.

Shakspeare.

No tears, Celia, now shall win

My resolv'd heart to return;

I have search'd thy soul within,

And find nought but pride and scorn.

Carw.

That flood witness'd his inconstant flame,

When thus he swore, and won the yielding dame.

Gay.

TO WIN. v. n.

1. To gain the victory.

Nor is it aught but just,

That he, who in debate of truth hath won,

Should win in arms.

Milton.

2. To gain influence or favour.

You express yourself very desirous to win upon the judgment of your master, and not upon his affections only.

Bacon.

You have a softness and sweetness winning on the hearts of others.

Thy words like musick every breast controul,

Stead thro' the air, and win upon the soul.

Pope.

3. To gain ground.

The rabble will in time win upon power.

Shakspeare.

4. To be conqueror or gainer at play.

Charles, I will play no more to-night:

My mind's not on't, you are too hard for me.

—Sir, I did never win of you before.

—But little, Charles;

Nor shall not, when my fancy's on my play.

Shakspeare.

TO WINCE. v. n. [gwingo, Welsh.] To kick, as impatient of pain.

I will sit as quiet as a lamb,
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word.

Shakspeare.

Room, room, for my horse will wince,

If he came within so many yards of a prince.

Ben Jonson.

The angry beast did straight resent

The wrong done to his fundament,

Began to kick, and sting, and wince,

As if he had been beside his sense.

Hudibras.

WINCE. n. f. [from wince.] A kicking beast.

WINCH. n. f. [guincher, Fr. to twist.] A windlass; something held in the hand

by which a wheel or cylinder is turned.

Put a winch with the wheel.

Mortimer.

TO WINCH. v. a. [The same with wince;

or perhaps from guincher, French, to twist; winch signifying sometimes to writhe or contort the body.] To kick with impatience; to shrink from any uneasiness.

We who have free souls

It touches not, let the gall'd jade wince;

Our withers are unmoving.

Shakspeare.

Have these bones rattled, and this head

So often in the quarrel bled!

Nor did I ever wince, or grudge it.

Hudibras.

This last allusion gall'd the panther more;

Yet seem'd the not to wince, though thrav'dly

pun'd.

Dryden.

Their confidences are gul'd; and this makes them wince and sting, as if they had some nettle.

Tillotson.

WINSOPIPE. n. f.

There is a small red flower in the stubble-fields, which country people call the winsopipe; which if it opens in the morning, you may be sure a fair day will follow.

Bacon.

WIND. n. f. [pinb, Saxon; wind, Dutch;

gwynt, Welsh.]

1. Wind is when any tract of air moves from the place it is in, to any other, with an impetus that is sensible to us; wherefore it was not ill called by the ancients

a swifter course of air; a flowing wave of air; a flux, effusion, or stream of air.

Muschenbruck.

The worthy fellow is our general. He's the rock, the oak, not to be wind shaken.

Shakspeare.

Love's heralds should be thoughts

Which ten times faster glide than the sun beams,

Driving back shadows over lowering hills,

Therefore do wimble-pinn'd doves draw love;

And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings.

Shakspeare.

Falmouth lieth farther ont in the trade way, and so offeth a sooner opportunity to wind-driven ships than Plymouth.

Carw.

Wind is nothing but a violent motion of the air, produced by its rarefaction more in one place than another, by the sun-beams, the attractions of the moon, and the combinations of the earth's motions.

Chyene.

2. Direction of the blast from a particular point; as eadward, westward.

I'll give thee a wind,

I myself have all the other,

And the very points they blow;

All the quarters that they know

I'th' shipman's card.

Shakspeare.

In the year 1500, one Flavio of Malphi, in the realm of Naples, tow'd out the compass, or pr's nautica, consisting of eight winds only, the four principal, and four collateral; and not long after, the people of Bruges and Antwerp pertr'd a excellent invention, adding twenty-four other subordinate winds.

Heglin.

3. Breath; power or act of respiration.

If my winc were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repeat.

Shakspeare.

The perfume of the flowers, and their virtues to cure shortness of wind in purly old men, seems to agree most with the orange. Temple

It shopp'd at once the passage of his wind, And the first foal to sitting air resign'd. Dryden

4. Air caused by any action. On each side her

Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids, With divers colour'd faws, whose wind did seem To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakespeare

In an organ, from one blast of wind, To many a raw of pipes the sound-bowd breathes. Milton

5. Breath modulated by an instrument. Where the air is pent, there breath or other blowing, which carries but a gentle percussion, suffices to create sound; as in pipes and wind instruments. Bacon

Their instruments were various in their kind; Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind. Dryden

6. Air impregnated with scent. A hare had long escap'd pursuing hounds, By often flitting into distant grounds, Till finding all his artificees vain, To save his life, he leapt into the main, But there, alas! he could no safety find, A pack of dog bils had him in the wind. Swift

7. Flatulence; windiness. It turns Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind. Milton

8. Any thing insignificant or light as wind. Think not with wind of airy threats to awe. Mit ice

This matter thus with pleacht arms, bending down his coriacle neck, his face subdued

To penetrative thence?

Shakespeare.

3. To break into openings.

Poor naked wretches, whetoe'er you are,

That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,

How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides,

Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you

From seasons such as these?

Shakespeare.

WINDPIPE. n. f. [wind and pipe.] The passage for the breath; the aperta arteria.

Let gillows gaze for dogs, let man go free,

And let not hemp his windpipe fullicate.

The windpipe, rough artery, or windpipe, is a part inferient to voice and respiration; thereby the air descendeth into the lungs, and is communicated into the heart.

Brown.

The quacks of government, who fat

At the unregarded helm of state,

Consider'd timely how t' withdraw,

And save their windpipes from the law.

Beaute continu'd respiration is necessary for the support of our lives, the windpipe is made with annu-lar cartilages.

Rog.

The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches, called bronchiae: these end in small air bladders, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it.

It keeps on the windy side of care.

Shakespeare.

3. Empty; any.

Why should calumny be full of words?

Why by attorneys to their client woes?

Poor breathing orators of many words?

What wind in joy this day had I receiv'd,

Hopeful of his delivery, which now proves

Abortive, as the fast-born bloom of spring

Nipt with the lagging reer of winter's frost!

Milton.

Look, here 's that windy applause, that poor transitory pleasure, for which I was dishonoured.

South.

Of ev'ry nation each illustrious name

Such toys as these have cheated into time,

Exchanging loud quiet to obtain

The wind satisfaction of the brain.

Dryden.

4. Tempestuous; molested with wind.

On this windy sea of land the fiend

Walk'd up and down.

Milton.

It is not bare agitation, but the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water; and when we see it windy and dusty, the wind does not make but only raise dirt.

South.

5. Puffy; flatulent.

In such a windy colic, water is the best remedy

after a surfeit of fruit.

WINE. n. f. [pin, Saxon; vinn, Dutch.]

1. The fermented juice of the grape.

The wine of life is drawn, and the meier lees

Is left this vault to brag of.

Do not fall in love with me;

For I am taller than vows made in wine.

The increase of the vineyards for the wine cellars

Be not amongst wine-bibbers, amongst riotous eaters.

They garments like him that treadeth in the wine fat.

They took old sacks upon their asses, and wine- bottles old and rent, and bound up.

Where the wine-press is hard-wrought, it yields a harsh wine that tastes of the grape-stem.

His troops on my strong youth like torrents rush;

As in a wine-press is Judah's daughter crush'd.

With large wine offerings pour'd, and sacroful.

Shall I, to please another wine-sprung mind,

Lo! all mine own? God hath giv'n me a measure

Short of his came and body: must I find

A pain in that, wherein he finds a pleasure?

The firstlings of the flock are doom'd to die;

Rich fragrant wines the clattering bowl supply.

If the highhead falls short, the wine-cooper had not fill'd it in proper time.

2. Preparations of vegetables by fermentation, called by the general name of wines, have quite different qualities from the plant; for no fruit, taken crude, has the intoxicating quality of wine.

WING. n. f. [gehping, Saxon; unge,

Danish.]

1. The limb of a bird by which it flies.

As Venus' bird, the white swift lovely dove,

Doth on her wings her utmost swiftness prove,

Finding the gape of falcon fierce not fur.

Ignorance is the curse of God,

Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heaven.

An eagle stirreth up her nest, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them and beareth them on her wings.

A spleenless wind to stretch

Her wings to wait us, and to urge our keel.

The pounce of augurs, Hechtherles, roil;

Present he view'd th' aerial tracts, and drew

A sure preface from ev'ry wing that flew.

2. A lan to window.

It is, cartnave, and busiel, peck, ready at hand.

3. Flight; passage by the wing.

Light thicks us, and the crow

Makes wing to th' looky wood.

Good things of day begin to droop and drowse,

While night's black agents to their prey do rouse.

Thy affections hold a wing

Quite from the flight of all thy successors.

I have pursued her as love hath pursued me, on the wing of all occasions.

While passion is upon the wing, and the man fully engaged in the prosecution of some master object, no remedy or controul is to be expected from his reason.

You are too young your power to understand,

Lovers take wing upon the keel's command.

And fir, light, with inborn vigour, on the wing,

Like mounting larks, to the new morning sing.

Then life is on the wing; then most the larks

When most the seems reviv'd.

4. The motive or incitement of flight.

Is leaden servitude, and that-pac'd beggary;

Delay leads hapless and that-pac'd beggary;

Then fety expiation be my wing,

Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king.

Shakespeare.

WIN

the bodies of an army.

The footmen were Germans, to whom were joined as wings certain companies of Italians. Kneller

The left wing put to flight, the chief's o'erborn, he rushes on the right. Dryden.
6. Any side-piece.

The plough proper for stiff clays is long, large, and broad, with a deep head and a square ear-board, the counter long and very little bending, with a very large wing. Montmer.

To WING. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with wings; to enable to fly. The speed of gods
Time counts not, though with swiftest minutes wing'd. Milton.

Who knows but he, whose hand the lightning forms,
Who heaves old ocean, and who wings the storms,
Pours fierce ambition in a mortal's mind,
Or turns young Ammon back to scourge mankind? Pope.

2. To supply with side bodies.

We outflank will follow
In the main battle, which on either side
Shall be well winged with our chivalry horse. Shakespeare.

To WING. v. n.

1. To transport by flight.

I, an old tutor,
Will wing me to some wicker d bough, and there
My mate, that's never to be found again,
I am at till I am lost. Shakespeare.

2. To exert the power of flying.

Warm'd with more particles of heavenly flame,
He wing'd his upward flight, and soar'd to fame;
The rest remain'd below, a crowd without a name. Dryden

Struck with the horror of the fight,
She turns her head, and wings her flight. Prior.
From the Meotis to the northern sea,
The goddess wings her desperate way. Prior.

WINGED. adj. [from wing.]

1. Furnished with wings; flying.

And shall grace not find means, that finds her way

The swiftest of thy winged messengers,
To visit all thy creatures? Milton.

We can tear no force
But winged troops, on Protestant horse. Waller.
The winged lion's not to force in fight,
As I thine hand presents him to our sight. Waller.

The cockney is reputed at many actions of the quadruped and winged animals in the fields. Watts.

2. Swift; rapid.

Now we bear the king
Tow'rd Calais, grant him there, and there bring teen,
Heave him away upon your winged thoughts Ashore the sea. Shakespeare.

His good sir W's back, bear this loaded brief
With winged haste to the lord marshal. Shakespeare.

WINGEDPEA. n. f. [ochrus, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

WINGSHELL. n. f. [wing and shell.] The shell that covers the wing of insects.

The long shielded goat chaffer is above an inch long, and the wing sheath of themselves an inch, and half an inch broad, so deep as to come down below the belly on both sides. Grew.

WINGY. adj. [from wing.] Having wings;
resembling wings.

They spring together out, and swiftly bear
The flying youth through clouds and yielding air;
With winged speed outstrip the eastern wind,
And leave the breezes of the moon behind. Addis.

To WINK. v. n. [pinetan, Sax. winken,
Dutch.]

1. To shut the eyes.

Let's see thine eyes, now open them:
In my opinion yet you do it not well. Shakespeare.
They're fainest to that speaks to them: shall die:
I'll wink and catch; no man their sports must eye. Shakespeare.

WIN

His false cunning

Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance,
And grew a twenty years removed thing,
While one would wink. Shakespeare.

He, with great imagination,
Proper to madmen, led his pow'rs to death,
And, winking, leap'd into destruction. Shakespeare.

In despite of all this, he runs toolishly into his sin and ruin, merely because he winks hard, and rushes violently like a horse into the battle. Taylor.

The Scripture reprehends wicked men as without understanding: not that they are destitute of the natural faculty, they are not blind, but they wink. Tillotson.

If any about them should make them think there is any difference between being in the dark and winking, get it out of their minds. Locke.

2. To hint, or direct, by the motion of the eyelids.

You saw my master wink and laugh upon you. Shakespeare.
Send him a spoon when he wants a knife; wink at the footman to leave him without a plate. Swift.

3. To close, and exclude the light.

While flames pop'd and sung, and told his tale,
The keeper's winking eyes began to fail,
And drowsy slumber on the lids to creep,
Till all the watchman was at length asleep. Dryden.

When you shoot, and shut one eye,
You cannot think he would deny
To lend the t'other friendly aid,
Or wink, as coward and afraid. Prior.

4. To connive; to seem not to see; to tolerate.

They be better content with one that will wink at their faults, than with him that will reprove them. Whigft.

I, for winking at your disorders too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakespeare.
Let not night see my black and deep desires;
The eye winks at the hand! Shakespeare.

The king gave him great gifts, and winked at the great spoil of Bosworth-field, which came almost wholly to this man's hands. Bacon.

Let us not write at a loose resembling rate,
In hope the world will wink at all our faults.

Obstinacy cannot be winked at, but must be rebuted. Locke.

Cato is stern, and awful as a god:
He knows not how to wink at human frailty,
Or pardon weakness that he never lost. Addison.

5. To be dim.

The tulien tyrant slept not all the night,
But, loaz'd walking by a winking light,
Sobbd, wapt, and groan'd, and beat his wither'd breast. Dryden.

WINK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Act of closing the eye.

You doing thus,
To the perpetual wink for ay might put
This ancient moral. Shakespeare.

At every wink of an eye some new grace will be born. Shakespeare.

Since I receiv'd command to do this business,
I have not slept one wink. Shakespeare.

The Venus to reverend and strong,
Dost thou not think
I could eclipse and cloud them with a wink,
But that I would not lose her sight for long? Donne.

It rag'd in thought, that I could not sleep a wink. Temple.

No, but then I think;
And for my foot I cannot sleep a wink. Pope.

2. A hint given by motion of the eyes;
Her wink each bold attempt forbids. Sidney.
The stockjobber thus from 'Change-alley goes
down,
And tips you the freeman a wink;
Let me have but your vote to serve for the town,
And here is a guinea to drink. Swift.

WINKER. n. f. [from wink.] One who winks.

A set of nodders, winkers, and whisperers, whose business is to strangle all others offspring of wit in their birth. Pope.

WIN

WINKINGLY. adv. [from winking.] With the eye almost closed.

If one beholdeth the light, he vieweth it winkingly, as those do that are parblind; but if any thing that is black, he looketh upon it with a broad and full eye. Peachment.

WINNER. n. f. [from win.] One who wins.

A gamester, having lost all, borroweth of his next fellow gamester some hat to maintain play; which he setting unto him again, shortly winneth all from the winner. Spenser.

Go together,
You precious winners all, your exultation Partake to every one. Shakespeare.

Bethrew the winners, for they play'd too false. Shakespeare.

Whether the winner laughs or no, the loser will complain; and rather than quarrel with his own skill, will do it at the dice. Temple.

WINNING. participlel adj. [from win.]
Attractive; charming.

Yet less fair,
I kiss a winning foil, lets amably mild,
Than that smooth watery image. Milton.

On her, as queen,
A pomp of winning graces wait'd full;
And from about her that darts of desire
Into all eyes, to wither her full in fight. Milton.

Shines out in every thing she acts or speaks,
While winning smiles and attractive smiles
Dwell in her looks, and with becoming grace
Soft'n the rigour of her father's virtues. Addison.

WINNING. n. f. [from win.] The sum won.

A simile in one of Congreve's prologues compares a writer to a buttering gamester, that takes all his winnings upon every call; so that if he loses the bet throw, he is sure to be undone. Addison.

To WINNOW. v. a. [pinetan, Saxon; cranno, Latin.]

1. To separate by means of the wind; to part the grain from the chaff.

Wee our royal faith martyrs in love,
We shall be warr'd with to rough a wind,
That even our corn shall be as light as chaff.

And good from bad find no partition. Shakespeare.
In the sun your golden grain display,
And thrash it out and winnow it by day. Dryden.

2. To fan; to beat as with wings.

Now on the polar winds, then with quick fan
It moves the buxom air. Milton.

3. To sift; to examine.

Winnow well your thought, and you shall find
'Tis light as chaff that flies before the wind. Dryden.

4. To separate; to part.

Partur totius fluit
Winnow the truth from falsehood. Shakespeare.

To WINNOW. v. n. To part corn from chaff.

Winnow not with every wind, and go not into every way. Ecclijasticus.

WINNOWER. n. f. [from winnow.] He who winnows.

WINTER. n. f. [pinetan, Saxon; winter, Danish, German, and Dutch.] The cold season of the year.

Though he were already kept into the winter of his age, he found himself warm in that d time, which were in his fan for more exorable. Shakespeare.

After summer evermore succeeds
The barren winter with his nipping cold. Shakespeare.
A woman's story at a winter's fire. Shakespeare.

He hath bought a pair of cast lips of Diana's man of winter's silverhood kisses not more richly;
the very eye of chastity is in them. Shakespeare.
The two beneath the distant poles compli in O' endless winter and perpetual rain. Lyden.
Lest thou sleep beneath that hill of snow?
Stretch out thy lazy limbs; awake, awake,
And winter from thy thriv' mantle shake. Lyden.

Suppose our poet was your foe before,
Yet now the business of the field is o'er:
Tis time to let your civil wars alone,
When troops are into winter quarters gone.

Dryden
He that makes no reflections on what he reads, Only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in winter-nights for the entertainment of others.

Locke
Stern winter smiles on that auspicious clime,
The fields are florid with un fading prime. Pope
To define winter, I consider first wherein it differs with summer, spring, autumn, and I find they are all seasons of the year; therefore a season of the year is a genus: then I observe wherein it differs from these, and that is in the shortness of the days; therefore this may be called its special nature, or difference: then, by joining them together, I make a definition. Winter is that season of the year, wherein the days are shortest. Watts

To WINTER. v. n. [from the noun.] To pass the winter.
The fowls shall summer upon them, and all the beasts of the earth shall winter upon them.

Spenser
Because the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part advised to depart. Acts

To WINTER. v. a. To feed or manage in the winter.

The cattle generally fold for slaughter within, or exportation abroad, had never been handled or wintered at hand-meet. Temple

Young lean cattle may by their growth pay for their wintering, and to be ready to fat next summer. Mottingham

WINTER is often used in composition.

The king sat in the winter-house, and there was a fire burning before him. Jeremiah
It in November and December they follow, 'tis called a winter-fallowing. Mottingham
Shred it very small with thyme, sweet marjoram, and a little winter-flavoury. Hallam

WINTERBEATEN. adj. [winter and beat.]
Harassed by severe weather.

He compareth his careful care to the sad season of the year, to the frosty ground, to the frozen trees, and to his own winterbeaten flocke. Spenser

WINTERCHERRY. n. f. [allchenger.] A plant. The fruit is about the bigness of a cherry, and inclosed in the cup of the flower, which swells over it in form of a bladder. Miller

WINTERCI'TRON. n. f. A sort of pear.

WINTERGREEN. n. f. [pyrola, Latin.]
A plant. Miller

WINTERLY. adj. [winter and like.] Such as is suitable to winter; of a wintry kind.

If 't be summer news,
Smile to't before; if winterly, thou need'st
But keep that countenance still. Shakspeare

WINTRY. adj. [from winter.] Brumal;
hyemal; suitable to winter.

He saw the Trojan feet dispers'd, distress'd,
By stormy winds and wintry heav'n oppress'd. Dryden

WINV. adj. [from wine.] Having the taste or qualities of wine.

Set several os among melons, and see whether the melons will not be more winy, and better tasted. Bacon

WIPE. v. a. [wipen, Saxon.]
To cleanse by rubbing with something soft.

Such a handkercher,
I'm sure it was your wife's, did I to-day
See Cassio wipe his beard with. Shakspeare
She a gentle tear let fall
From either eye, and wip'd them with her hair.

Milton
Then with her veil the woged she wip'd and dried. Denham

2. To take away by friction.

Calumniate stoutly; for though we wipe away with never so much care the dirt thrown at us, there will be left some sullage behind.

Decay of Piety.

3. To strike off gently.
Let me wipe off this honorable dew,
That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks.

Shakspeare
Some natural tears they dropp'd, but wip'd them soon. Milton

A young man, having suffered many tortures, escaped with life, and told his fellow christians,
that the pain of them had been rendered tolerable by the presence of an angel, who stood by him and wiped off the tears and sweat. Addison

4. To clear away.
Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples; reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Shakspeare

5. [emungo.] To cheat; to defraud.
The next bordering lords commonly encroach one upon another, no one is stronger, or he full in want to wipe them out of their lands. Spenser

6. To WIPE out. To efface.
This blot, that they object against your house,
Shall be wip'd out in the next parliament.

Shakspeare
As thou lov'st me, Camillo, wipe not out the rest of thy services by leaving me now. Shakspeare

Take one in whom deep'd old age has blotted out the memory of his past knowledge, and clearly wiped out the ideas his mind was formerly stored with, and topped up all the passages for new ones, to enter; or it there be some of the inlets yet left open, the impressions made are scarce perceived. Locke

WIPE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Act of cleansing.
2. A blow; a stroke; a jeer; a gibe; a sarcasm.

To flattermen would you give a wipe,
You print it in Italian type:
When letters are in vulgar shapes,
'Tis ten to one the wit escapes;
But when in capitals express'd,
The dulled reader smokes the jest. Swift

3. [cancelus.] A bird. Ainsworth

WIPE. n. f. [from wipe.] An instrument or person by which any thing is wiped.

The mads and their makes,
At dancing and wakes,
Had their wipers and posies,
And the wipers for their noses. Ben Jonson

WIPE. n. f. [wiper, French, to draw round.
Skinner.] Metal drawn into slender threads.

There was the dunsell, and without remorse
The king condemn'd her, guilty to the fire:
Her veil and mantle pluckt they off by force,
And bound her tender arms in twisted wire. Fairfax

Thou shalt be whipt with wire, and strew'd in thyme.

Smarting in ling'ring pickle. Shakspeare
The soldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of horror all environ,
That's strong with wire instead of veins,
In whose embraces you're in thrall. Fletcher

And the cherub host, in thousand quires,
Toush their immortal harps of golden wires. Mit.

Some roll a mighty stone, four laid along,
And bound with burning wires, on spokes of wheels are hung. Dryden

To WIREDRAW. v. a. [wire and draw.]

1. To spin into wire.

2. To draw out into length.
A fluid moving through a flexible canal, when small, by its friction will naturally lengthen and withdraw the sides of the canal, according to the direction of its axis. Arbuthnot

3. To draw by art or violence.
I have been wrongfully accused, and my sense wiredrawn into blasphemy. Dryden

WIREDRAW. n. f. [wire and draw.]
One who spins wire.

Those who have need of unmixed silver, as goldsmiths and wire-drawers, must, besides an equal weight of silver mixed with other metals, give an overplus to reward the refiner's skill. Locke

To WISE. v. a. pret. and part. pass. wis.
[wisshin. German; wysen, Dutch.] To think; to imagine. Obsolete.

Thus proud and fierce, unto the hearts he kept
Of them poor souls; and cutting reason's reins,
Made them his own before they had it wif. Sidney

When Mammon saw his purpose mist,
Him to entrap unware, another way he wif. Spenser

This book, advisedly read, and diligently follow'd but one year at home, would do a young gentleman more good, I wif, than three years travel abroad. Aylmer

There be fools alive, I wif,
Silver'd o'er, and so was this. Shakspeare

Marry with a king;
A bachelor, a handsome tripling too,
I wif your gambler had a wiser match. Shakspeare
When for more worlds the Macedonian cried,
He wif not Thetys in her lap did hide
Another yet, a world reserv'd for you,
To make more great than that he did subdue. Waller

WISDOM. n. f. [wisdom, Saxon; wisdom,
Danish.]

1. Sapience; the power of judging rightly; the knowledge of divine and human things.

That which moveth God to work is goodness, and that which ordereth his work is wisdom, and that which perfecteth his work is power. Hooker
As from reason's reason's work doth spring,
So many reasons understanding gain,
And many understandings knowledge bring,
And by much knowledge wisdom we obtain. Dantes

Wisdom is that which makes men judge what are the best ends, and what the best means to attain them, and gives a man advantage of counsel and direction. Temple

As science is properly that knowledge which re-lateth to the essences of things, so wisdom to their operations. Gruar

O sacred solitude! divine retreat!
Choice of the prudent, envy of the great!
By thy pure stream, or in the waving shade,
We court fair wisdom, that celestial maid. Young

2. Prudence; skill in affairs; judicious conduct.

'Tis much he dares,
And to that dauntless temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To act in safety. Shakspeare

Wisdom and fortune combating together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it. Shakspeare

WIS. adj. [wis, Saxon; wiss, Dutch and Danish.]

1. Sapient; judging rightly; having much knowledge.

Heav'n is for thee too high; be lowly wif. Milton

All the writings of the ancient Goths were confined in verse, which were called runes, or wises, and from thence the term of wif came. Temple

Since the floods demand
For their descent a prone and sinking land,
Does not this due deity declare
A wif director's providential care? Blackmore
The wif and best men, in all ages, have lived up to the religion of their country, when they saw nothing in it opposite to morality. Addison

2. Judicious; wisely; practically knowing.

There were ten virgins; five of them were wif, and five were foolish. Matthew
I would have you wif unto that which is good,
and simple concerning evil. Romans

And grace, that won who saw to wish her stay.
Rise, and went forth.
There are ships prepar'd by my command,
That shall convey you to the wish'd-for port.
Addison.

3. Skillful; dexterous.
Speak unto all that are wife-hearted, whom I have filled with the spirit of wisdom, that they may make Aaron's garments.
Exodus.

Do we count him a wife-man, who is wife in any thing but his own proper profession and employment, and wife for every body but himself?
Tillotson.

They are wife to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge.
Jeremiah.

4. Skilled in hidden arts; a female somewhat ironical.
There was an old fat woman even now with me. —

—Pray, wasn't not the wife woman of Brainford?
Shakespeare.

5. Grave; becoming a wife man.
One man in a wife doth not take much.
It must be a wife being that is the cause of those wife-like things.
William.

WIFE, n. f. [pire, Saxon; wyfe, Dutch;
wife, German; guife, Fr. guise, Italian.] Manner; way of being or acting. This word, in the modern dialect, is often corrupted into ways.

This is the most commanding wife;
Come, shepherd-boy, let now thy heart be bow'd
To make me to my lord a slave.
Sidney.

Here we sat her pite, I will devise
A passport for us both, in fits it wife.
Spenser.

On this wife ye that I think I find
The lovers standing in this doleful wife.
Numbers.

A warrior bold approached.
With foam upon thy lips, and sparkling eyes,
Thou say'st and dost in such outrageous wife,
That mid Orpheus, if he saw the show,
Would swear thou wert the maddest of the two.
Dryden.

'Tis in no wife strange that such a one should believe, that things were blindly shuffled.
Woodw.

WISACRE, n. f. [It was anciently written wisefegger, as the Dutch wiseggher, a foolfayer.]

1. A fool; or contentious man. Obsolete.
2. A fool; a dunce.

Why, says a wisacrer that sat by him, were I as the king of France, I would soon to take part with footmen.
Addison.

WISELY, adv. [from wife.] Judiciously;
prudently.

It thou covest death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not God
Hath wifely arm'd his vengeance.
Milton.

He is like a discontented Damocles,
When by the sportive tyrant wifely shown
The dangerous pleasure of a flatter'd throne.
Dryden.

Admitting their principles to be true, they act wifely: they keep their end, evil as it is, steadily in view.
Rogers.

The doctors, tender of their fame,
Wifely on me lay all the blame;
We must confess his case was nice,
But he would never take advice.
Swift.

WISERNESS, n. f. [from wife.] Wisdom;
sagacity. Obsolete.

No less deserveth his wittiness in devising, his pithiness in uttering, his pastoral rudeness, and his moral wifeness.
Spenser.

To WISH, v. n. [pirean, Saxon.]

1. To have strong desire; to long.
The sun heat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die.
Jonah.

Full the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tiring as to work;
But when they told that they wish'd-for came.
Shakespeare.

They have now what they wish'd-for.
Evans.

With lowliness she look'd from her seat,
Shakespeare.

And grace, that won who saw to wish her stay.
Rise, and went forth.
There are ships prepar'd by my command,
That shall convey you to the wish'd-for port.
Addison.

That Noah or Janna understood navigation, may be very well supported by his image found upon the first Roman coins. One side was stamp'd with a Janus bifrons, and the other with a rostrum, or prow of a ship. This is as good an argument as an antiquary could wish for.
Arbuthnot.

And much he wish'd, but durst not ask to part.
Parnell.

2. To be disposed or inclined.
Those potentates, who do not wish well to his affairs, have shewn respect to his personal character.
Addison.

3. It has a slight signification of hope or fear.
I wish it may not prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune, to have met with such a under as I am.
Sidney.

To WISH, v. a.
1. To desire; to long for.
He was fain to pull him out by the heels, and show him the beast as dead as he could wish it.
Sidney.

2. To recommend by wishing.
Had I as many tows as I have hairs,
I would not wish them to a fanner death.
Shakespeare.

3. To imprecate.
If heavens have any grievous plague in store,
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee;
O let them keep it till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation.
Shakespeare.

4. To ask.
Dugby should find the best way to make Antrim communicate the affair to him, and to wish his assistance.
Clarendon.

WISH, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Longing desire.
To his wish,
Beyond his hope, Eve separate he flies.
Milton.

A wish is properly the desire of a man sitting or lying still, but an act of the will, is a man of business vigorously going about his work.
South.

2. Thing desired.
What next I bring shall please thee; be assur'd,
Thy likeness, thy fit help, thy other self,
Thy wish, exactly to thy heart's desire.
Milton.

3. Desire expressed.
Shame come to Romeo —
—Butler'd be thy tongue
For such a wish!
I admire your whig principles of reliance in the spirit of the Bau clowns. I join in your wish for them.
Pope.

WISHEDLY, adv. [from wish'd.] According to desire. Not used.
What could have happened unto him, more wish'd for, than with his great honour to keep the town full.
Kneller.

WISHER, n. f. [from wish.]
1. One who longs.
2. One who expresses wishes.
Wishers and woulders are never good householders.
Pope.

Wish half that with the wisher's eyes be wish'd.
Shakespeare.

WISHFUL, adj. [from wish and full.]
1. Longing; showing desire.
From Scotland am I stol'n, even of pure love,
To greet mine own land with my wishful looks.
Shakespeare.

2. Desirable; exciting wishes.
Nor could I see a Gule, where'er I came,
More sweete and wishful.
Chapman.

WISHFULLY, adv. [from wishful.] Earnestly; with longing.
WISKEY, n. f. A basket.
Ainsworth.

WISP, n. f. [wisp, Swedish and old Dutch.]
A small bundle, as of hay or straw.
A wife of straw for a ballad.
Shakespeare.

And grace, that won who saw to wish her stay.
Rise, and went forth.
There are ships prepar'd by my command,
That shall convey you to the wish'd-for port.
Addison.

That Noah or Janna understood navigation, may be very well supported by his image found upon
the first Roman coins. One side was stamp'd with a Janus bifrons, and the other with a rostrum, or prow of a ship. This is as good an argument as an antiquary could wish for.
Arbuthnot.

And much he wish'd, but durst not ask to part.
Parnell.

2. To be disposed or inclined.
Those potentates, who do not wish well to his affairs, have shewn respect to his personal character.

nestly; with longing.
WISKEY, n. f. A basket.
Ainsworth.

WISP, n. f. [wisp, Swedish and old Dutch.]
A small bundle, as of hay or straw.
A wife of straw for a ballad.
Shakespeare.

A gentleman would fast five days, without meat, bread, or drink; but the same used to have continually a great wife of herbs that he smelted on;
and amongst those some excellent herb of strong scent, as onions.
Bacon.

Jews, who their whole wealth can lay
In a small basket, on a wife of hay.
Dryden.

WIST, v. n. The past, and part, of wis.
WISTFUL, adj.
1. Attentive; earnest; full of thought.
Why, Grubbs, dost thou to wistful seem?
There's sorrow in thy look.
Gay.

2. It is used by Swift, as it seems, for wishful; though it may mean earnest, cager.
Laying up one of my fishes, I cast many a wistful melancholy look towards the sea.
Swift.

WISTFULLY, adv. [from wistful.] Attentively; earnestly.
With that he fell again to pay
Through perspective more wistfully.
Hudibras.

WISTLY, adv. [from wis.] Attentively;
earnestly.
Speaking it, he wistly look'd on me,
As who shall say, I would thou wert the man.
Shakespeare.

To WIT, v. n. [pirean, Saxon.] To know.
This word is now only used in the phrase to wit, that is to say.
There is an officer, to wit, the sheriff of the shire,
whose office it is to walk up and down his bailiwick.
Spenser.

Yet are these feet, whose strengthless stay is numb,
Unable to support this lump of clay.
Swift-winged with desire to get a grave;
As waiting I no other comfort have.
Shakespeare.

WIT, n. f. [ræpæ, Saxon; from pirean, to know.]
1. The powers of the mind; the mental faculties; the intellects. This is the original signification.
Who would let his wit to so foolish a bird?
Shakespeare.

The king your father was reputed for
A prince most prudent, of an excellent
And unmatch'd wit and judgment.
Shakespeare.

Will puts in practice what the wit deviseth,
Will ever acts, and yet contemplates still;
And as from not the power of wisdom riseth,
All other virtues daughters are of will.
Will is the prince, and wit the counsellor
Which doth for common good in council sit;
And when wit is resolv'd, will lends her power
To execute what is advis'd by, wit.
Darley.

For wit and power their last endeavours bend
To outlive each other.
Dryden.

2. Imagination; quickness of fancy.
They never meet, but in a wishfulness of wit between them. — Alas, to see that conflict, four of his five wits went halting out, and now is the odd man govern'd by one.
Shakespeare.

I wad, shallow, head-brained brags make atheism, and contempt of religion, the only badge and character of wit.
South.

And though a tun in thy large bulk be writ,
Yet thou art but a kilderkin of wit.
Dryden.

If it lying most in the assemblage of ideas, and putting those together with quickness and variety, wherein can be found any resemblance or con-gruity, thereby to make up pleasant pictures in the tancy. Judgment, on the contrary, lies in separating carefully one from another ideas wherein can be found the least difference, thereby to avoid being misled by similitude.
Locke.

Could any but a knowing prudent cause
Begin such motions, and suggest such laws?
If the great mind had form'd a different frame,
Might not your wanton wit the system change?
Blackmore.

3. Sentiments produced by quickness of fancy, or by genius; the effect of wit.
All sorts of men take a pleasure to gird at me.
The brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends more to laughter than what I invent, and is invented on me.

I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wits is in other men. Shakespeare.

His works become the frippery of wit. B. Jonson.
The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdued the world. Spenser.

The definition of wit is only this, that it is a propriety of thoughts and words; or, in other terms, thoughts and words elegantly adapted to the subject. Dryden.

Let a lord once but own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens, and the style refines! Pope.

4. A man of fancy.

Intemperate wits will spare neither friend nor foe, and make themselves the common enemies of mankind. L'Estrange.

A poet, being too witty himself, could draw nothing but wits in a comedy; even his tools were infected with the disease of their author. Dryden.

To tell them would a hundred tongues require;
Or our vain wits, that night a hundred tire. Pope.

5. A man of genius.

Hence 'tis a wit, the greatest word of fame,
Grows such a common name;
And wits by our creation they become,
Just as titular bishops made at Rome:

'Tis not a rule, 'tis not a jest
Admir'd with laughter at a feast,
Nor florid talk, which can that title gain;
The proofs of wit for ever must remain. Cowley.

Searching wits, of more mechanic parts,
Who grac'd their age with new-invented arts;
Those who to worth their bounty did extend,
And those who knew that bounty to commend. Dryden.

How vain that second life in others breath,
Th' effate which wits inherit after death!
Ease, health, and life for this they must resign;
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine!

The great man's curse without the gain endure;
Be envy'd, wretched; and be flatter'd, poor. Pope.

Nought but a genius can a genius fit;
A wit herself, Amelia weds a wit. Young.

6. Sense; judgment.

Strong was their plot,
Their practice close, their faith suspected not,
Their states far off, and they of wary wit. Daniel.

Come, leave the boathed stage,
And this more louthsome age;
Where pride and impudence, in faction knit,
Usurp the chair of wit. Ben Jonson.

Though his youthful blood be fi'd with wine,
He wants not wit the danger to decline. Dryden.

7. Faculty of the mind.

If our wits run the wildgoose-chace, I have done;
For thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakespeare.

8. [In the plural.] Soundness of under- standing; intellect not crazed; sound mind.

I had a son,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he fought my life:
The grief hath craz'd my wits. Shakespeare.

Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain? Shakespeare.

Sound sleep cometh of moderate eating; he iseth early, and his wits are with him. But the man of watching, and choler, and pangs of the rely, are with an untatiable man. Feet-jostles.

No man in his wits can make any doubt, whether there be such things as motion, and sensation, and continuity of bodies. Wilkins.

Wickedness is voluntary frenzy, and every sinner does more extravagant things than any man that is crazed, and out of his wits, only that he knows better what he does. Tillson.

No man in his wits can seriously think that his own soul hath existed from all eternity. Bentley.

Contrivance; stratagem; power of expedients; invention; ingenuity.
How can it climb but bring the simple to their wits end? how can it obuse but vex and amuse them? Hodder.

I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brainford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me. Shakespeare.

Slights from his wit and subtlety proceed.

The neighbourhood were at their wits end, to consider what would be the issue. L'Estrange.

WITCH, n. f. [piece, Saxon.]

1. A woman given to unlawful arts.

Wife judges have prescribed, that men may not rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor the evidence against them. For the witches themselves are imaginative; and people are credulous, and ready to impute accidents to witchcraft. Becon.

View the ruder wits, the conjurer by root, and has the not store of ignorance, and zeal of mischief? Holyday.

The night-hag comes to dance
With Lapland witches, while the lab'ring moon
Eclipses at their charms. Milton.

When I consider whether there are such persons as witches, my mind is divided: I believe in general that there is such a thing as witchcraft, but can give no credit to any particular instances of it. Spectator.

2. [from pie, Sax.] A winding sinuous bank.

Leave me those hills where harbrough is to see,
Nor holy bush, nor briar, nor winding witch. Spenser.

To WITCH, v. a. [from the noun.] To bewitch; to enchant.

Me ill befits, that in der-doing arts,
And honour's lust, my vowed days do spend,
Unto thy bounteous baits, and pleasing charms,
With which weak men thou witch'st to utter! Spenser.

'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When church-yards yawn. Shakespeare.

I'll witch sweet ladies with my words and looks. Shakespeare.

WITCHCRAFT, n. f. [witch and craft.]

1. The practices of witches.

People are credulous, and ready to impute accidents and natural operations to witchcraft. Becon.

2. Power more than natural.

Urania name, whose force he knew so well,
He quickly knew what witchcraft gave the blow. Saturn.

Have not some of learning and civility thought themselves wise, in thinking witchcraft rather a mistake than a crime? Holyday.

If you cannot Bar his access to the king, never attempt
Any thing on him, for he hath a witchcraft
Over the king in his tongue. Shakespeare.

What subtle witchcraft man contrains
To change his pleasure into pains? Denham.

WITCHERY, n. f. [from witch.] En- chantment.

Another kind of petty witchery, if it be not altogether decent, they call charming of beads and buds. Raleigh.

Great Comus!
Deep skill'd in all his mother's witcheries. Milton.

WITCHCRACKER, n. f. [wit and cracker.]

A joker; one who breaks a jest.
A college of witchcrackers cannot float me out of my humour; dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? Shakespeare.

WITCHCRAFT, n. f. [wit and craft.] Con- trivance; invention. Obsolete.

He was no body that could hammer out of his name an invention of this witchcraft, and picture it accordingly. Camden.

WITE, v. a. [witan, Sax.] To blame; to reproach.

The palmer 'gan most bitterly
Her to rebuke, for being loose and light;
Which not abiding, but more licentiously
Scoffing at him, that did her justly wite,
She torn'd her boat about. Spenser.

WITE, n. f. [from the verb.] Blame; reproach.

With, preposit. [pið, Saxon.]

1. By; noting the cause.

Truth, th'd with iterat

As true as steel, as pliant to the moon, and
With thy powerful blast,
Heat apace, and cool as fast. Cure.

They adhered to John, their deprived bishop, and could not be charmed with the flattery of any second bishop, during his life. Leigh.

With every stab her bleeding heart was torn,
With wounds much harder to be seen than born. Rare.

2. Noting the means.

Rude and unpolished are all operations of the soul in their beginnings, before they are cultivated with art and study. Dryden.

3. Noting the instrument.

As though the lazy vapour flies,
And sweeps, with healthy wings, the rank polluted flies. Rare.

By persulations with large bellows, miners give motion to the air. Woodward.

4. On the side of; for; noting confede- racy or favour.

Fear not, for I am with thee. Genesis.

5. In opposition to; in competition or contest.

I do contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever 'gainst thy colour. Shakespeare.

He shall be with any man in Spain. Dryden.

6. Noting comparison.

Can blazing carbuncles with her compare? Sandy.

7. In society; noting connexion.

God gave man a soul that should live for ever, although the body be destroyed; and those who were good should be with him. Stillingfleet.

In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou 'rt such a touchy, telly, pleading fellow;
Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Tatler.

8. In company of.

At the instant that thy messenger came, in loving visitation was with me a young doctor from Rome. Shakespeare.

9. In appendage; noting consequence or concomitance.

Men might know the persons who had a right to regal power, and with it to their obedience. Locke.

10. In mutual dealing.

I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. Shakespeare.

11. Noting confidence; as, I trust you with all my secrets; or, I trust all my secrets with you.

In partnership.
Though Jove himself no less content would be,
To part his throne and share his heaven with thee. Pope.

13. Noting connexion.

Pity your own, or pity our estate,
Nor twist our fortunes with your sinking fate. Dryden.

14. Immediately after.

With that she told me, that, though the stake of her father Cremer, she would hide no truth from me. Edwards.

With that, he crawled out of his nest,
Forth creeping on his castif hails and thighs. Fairy Queen.

In falling, both an equal fortune tried,
Would fortune for my fall so well provide!
With this he pointed to his face, and show'd
His hands and all his habit linear'd with blood. Dryden.

With that the god his darling phantom calls
And from his fast'ning this message tells. Gaith.

15. Among

Among the king's officers, the king used to employ with the first in his service. Becon.

ly, with the antients, a piece
Immortal powers the term of conscience know,
But interest is her name with men below.

5. Upon.

Such arguments had invincible force with those Immortal powers who became christians. Addy.

7. In content: noting parity of state.

See where on earth the flow'ry glories lie!
Hush her they flourish'd, and with her they die.

8. This preposition might perhaps be exemplified in many more relations, for its use is very frequent, and therefore very lay and various. With and by it is not always easy to distinguish, nor perhaps is any distinction always observed. With seems rather to denote an instrument, and by a cause: thus, he killed his enemy with a sword, but he died by an arrow. The arrow is considered rather as a cause, as there is no mention of an agent. If the agent be more remote, by is used; as,

the vermin which he could not kill with his gun, he killed by poison: if these two prepositions be transposed, the sentence, though equally intelligible, will be less agreeable to the common modes of speech.

9. With, in composition, signifies opposition or privation; except withal.

A perfect natural good may be parted with,
upon a profitable expectation of a future moral good.

VITHA'L. adv. [with and all.]

Along with the rest; likewise; at the same time.

Yet it must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which be tainted from perfection.

How well supplied with noble counsellors!

How modest in exception, and withal

How terrible in consistent resolution!

The one contains my picture, price;

If you chuse that, then I am yours withal.

This that prince did not transmit as a power, to make conquest, but as a retinue for his son, and withal, to enable him to recover some part of his.

The river being wholly of fresh water, and to large withal, chok'd the air.

God, when he gave me strength, to flow withal
flow'd light the gut was, hung it in my hair.

'Tis necessary men should be out of their nonage before they can attain to an actual use of this principle; and, withal, that they should be ready to exert and exercise their faculties.

I cannot, cannot bear; 'tis pass'd, 'tis done;

Perish this impious, this detested son!

Perish his fire, and perish I withal,

And let the house's hen and the hop'd kingdom fall.

Christ had not only an infinite power to work miracles, but also an equal wisdom to know the just force and measure of every argument to persuade, and withal to look through and through all the dark corners of the soul of man, and to discern what prevals upon them, and what does not.

2. It is sometimes used by writers where we now use with, but I think improperly. Time brings means to furnish him withal;

Let him but wait th' occasions as they fall.

It is to know what withal delights us, and is pleased withal have us do in order to our happiness.

We owe to withal the discovery of the most perfect rule of withal over the world was accounted withal.

To WITHDRAW. v. a. [with and draw;
from pið, or piðen, Saxon, against, and draw.]

1. To take back; to bereave.

It is not possible they should observe the one,
who from the other withdraw unnecessarily obedience.

Impossible it is that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite.

2. To call away; to make to retire.

Nautican is withdrawn, and a whole nation introduced, for a more general praise of Lyfies.

To WITHDRAW. v. n. To retire; to retreat.

She from her husband soft withdrew.

At this excess of courage all amaz'd,
The remnant of his foes awhile withdrew.

With such respect in enter'd Rome they gaz'd,
Who on high chairs the godlike fathers saw.

Dunstan has pass'd the noon of life; but cannot withdraw from entertainments which are pardonable only before that stage of our being.

WITHDRAWING-ROOM. n. f. [withdraw and room.] Room behind another room, for retirement.

For an ordinary gentleman, a hall, a great parlour, with a withdrawing-room, with a kitchen, but-teries, and other conveniences, is sufficient.

WITH. n. f.

26. A with, a with, a with, with which his feet
I made together in a sure league meet.

27. A with, a with, a with, with which his feet
I made together in a sure league meet.

That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on't?

Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change

To with'd, weak, and grey.

In Spain one throng, like old men's children, be-Decey'd and with'd from their infancy:

No kindly flowers fall on our barren earth,
To hatch the nations in a timely birth.

WITHREARD. n. f. A piece of iron which is laid under a fiddle, about four fingers above the horse's withers, to keep the two pieces of wood tight that form the bow.

WITHEREDNESS. n. f. [from withered.]
The state of being withered; marci-dity.

Water them as soon as fit, till they have recovered their witheredness.

WITHERS. n. f. Is the joining of the shoulder-bones at the bottom of the neck, and mane, towards the upper part of the shoulder.

Let the gall'd beast wince,

We are awing in the withers.

Rather than let your mules take long journeys, contrive that the fiddle may push the back in his withers.

WITHERWIND. The hurt expressed by withering sometimes is caused by a bite of a horse, or by a fiddle being unfit, especially when the bows are too wide; for, when they are so, they bruise the flesh against the spines of the second and third vertebra of the back, which forms that prominence that rises above their shoulders.

To WITHHOLD. v. a. [with and hold.]
Withhold, or withholden, pret. and part.

Spenser has, for the sake of rhyme, very licentiously written withhaul.

1. To refrain; to keep from action; to hold back.

That hand, which as no kind of imminent danger
could cause at last to withhold itself, to neither have my practices, for many, so bloody, following since,
been ever able to make weary.

2. To refrain; to keep from action; to
hold back.

That hand, which as no kind of imminent danger

could cause at last to withhold itself, to neither have
my practices, for many, so bloody, following since,
been ever able to make weary.

9. To refrain; to keep from action; to
hold back.

That hand, which as no kind of imminent danger
could cause at last to withhold itself, to neither have
my practices, for many, so bloody, following since,
been ever able to make weary.

10. To refrain; to keep from action; to
hold back.

That hand, which as no kind of imminent danger
could cause at last to withhold itself, to neither have
my practices, for many, so bloody, following since,
been ever able to make weary.

11. To refrain; to keep from action; to
hold back.

That hand, which as no kind of imminent danger
could cause at last to withhold itself, to neither have
my practices, for many, so bloody, following since,

my practices, for many, so bloody, following since,
been ever able to make weary.

13. To refrain; to keep from action; to
hold back.

That hand, which as no kind of imminent danger
could cause at last to withhold itself, to neither have
my practices, for many, so bloody, following since,
been ever able to make weary.

14. To refrain; to keep from action; to
hold back.

That hand, which as no kind of imminent danger
could cause at last to withhold itself, to neither have
my practices, for many, so bloody, following since,
been ever able to make weary.

15. To refrain; to keep from action; to hold back.

WITHIN-DOOR. n. f. [from withhold.] He who withholds.

WITHIN. prep. [pi'di'nan, Saxon.]

1. In the inner part of.

Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn Itself for being there? Shakespeare.

By this means, not only many helpless persons will be provided for, but a generation of men will be bred up, within ourselves, not perverted by any other hopes. Sparr.

Till this be cured by religion, it is as impossible for a man to be happy, that is, pleased and contented within himself, as it is for a sick man to be at ease. Tillotson.

The river is afterwards wholly lost within the waters of the lake, that one discovers nothing like a stream, till within about a quarter of a mile from Geneva. Addison.

2. In the compass of; not beyond; used both of place and time.

Next day we saw, within a kenning before us, thick clouds, which put us in hope of land. Bacon.

A beech-wood and a rush-wood, which had all their leaves cut close to the roots, within six weeks had four leaves. Bacon.

Most birds come to their growth within a fortnight.

With a some while the king had taken up such living of his portion, that he resolved to make him a masterpiece. Watson.

The invention of arts necessary or useful to human life, hath been within the knowledge of man.

As to infinite space, a man can no more have a positive idea of the greatest, than he has of the least space. For in this latter, which is more within our comprehension, we are capable only of a comparative idea of smallness, which will always be less than any one whereof we have the positive idea. Lacke.

This, with the green hills and naked rocks within the neighbourhood, makes the most agreeable confusion. Tillotson.

Boundless desires within the line which birth and fortune have marked out, is an indispensable duty.

3. Not reaching to any thing external.

When on the brink the forming hour I met,
The desperate savage rush'd within my force,
And bore me headlong with him down the rock. Quincy.

6. In the reach of.

Secure of outward force, within himself
The danger lies, yet lies within his pow'r;
Against his will he can receive no harm. Milton.

I have suffer'd in your war;
Nor shall be wanting ought within my pow'r
For your relief. Dryden.

Thou Aurengzebe return a conqueror,
Both he and the air fall within my pow'r. Dryden.

7. Into the heart or confidence of.

When by such insinuations they have once got within him, and are able to drive him on from one error to another, no wonder if they refuse to be guilty of all villainy. South.

8. Not exceeding.

Be inform'd how much your husband's revenue amounts to, and be so good a computer as to keep within it. Swift.

9. In the enclosure of.

No interwoven reeds a garland made,
To hide his brows within the vulgar shade;
But poplar wreaths around his temples spread. Addison.

10. On the outside of.

Without the gate
drive the cars, and sound the couriers rein. Dryden.

11. Not within.

When the weather hinders me from taking my diversions without doors, I frequently make a little party with select friends. Addison.

12. With exemption from.

The great lords of Ireland informed the king, that the Irishry might not be naturalized without damage to themselves or the crown. Davies.

Happiness under this view every one constantly pursues. Other things, acknowledged to be good,

Sedentary and within-door arts, and delicate manufactures, that require rather the finger than the arm, have a contrariety to a military disposition. Bacon.

WITHIN. adv.

1. In the inner parts; inwardly; internally.

This is yet the outward, fairest side
Of our design. Within is its more of fear,
More dread of sad event yet undeferr'd. Daniel.

Without the separation of the two monarchies, the most advantageous terms from the French must end in our destruction. Addison.

6. Not by; not by the use of; not by the help of.

Except of diet, in costly meats and drinks fetched from beyond the seas, would be avoided: while men will do it without a law; I would there might be a law to restrain fools. Bacon.

There is in a manner two sorts of virgin merceny; the one running out and discovering itself without labour; the other requiring some way of extraction and separation, not so high an one as by fire. Brown.

7. On the outside of.

Without the gate
drive the cars, and sound the couriers rein. Dryden.

8. Not within.

When the weather hinders me from taking my diversions without doors, I frequently make a little

Her face so fair, as flesh it seem'd not,
But heavenly portrait of bright angel's hue,
Clear as the sky, withouten blame or blot,
Through goodly mixture of complexion's dew. Spenser.

To WITHSTAND. v. a. [with and stand.]

To gaintand; to oppose; to resist.

The violence of sorrow is not at the first to be striven withal; being, like a mighty beast, sooner tamed with following, than overthrown by withstanding. Shakespeare.

The wonderful zeal and fervour with which have withstood the received orders of this church, was the last thing which caused me to enter into consideration, whether every christian man, learning God's stand bound to join with you. Hooker.

It is our faculty that in many things we all do amiss, but a virtue that we could do amiss in nothing, and a testimony of that virtue, that when we pray that what occasion of sin forever do offendeth, we may be strengthened from above to withstand
it. Hooker.

They soon let fall; nor now the fates withstand;
Their forces trull'd with a foreign hand. Tranter.

When Elmas withstood Paul and Barnabas, and when Paul says of Alexander, he hath greatly withstood our words, do we think the withstanding there was without speaking? Addison.

understanding; inconsiderate; wanting thought.

Why then should a witless man so much misween
That nothing is but that which he hath seen? Spenser.

I have ever lov'd the life remov'd;
And held in idleness the haunt of solitudes.
Where you have been, and witless have been. Shakespeare.

Guilty of my sin or guilt, as you
As vain as witless, and as idle as a dove.
Which dwell in court. Donne.

That which you say prove That which you say prove. Paraph.

The apple's outward form,
Delectable, the wit's twin beguile,
Till with a written mouth and pattering noise
He takes the bitter morsel and rejects. Philips.
WITLING. n. f. [diminutive of wit.] A pretender to wit; a man of petty smartness.

You have taken off the senseless ridicule which for many years the wittings of the town have turned upon their fathers and mothers. Spectator.
Those half-learn'd wittings, numerous in our isle
As half-form'd infants on the banks of Nile. Pope.

A beau and witting peris'd in the throng;
One died in metaphor, and one in song. Pope.

WITNESS. n. f. [pretterre, Saxon.]

1. Testimony; attestation.

The devil can cite scripture for his purpose;
An evil soul producing holy witness
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek,
A goodly apple rotten at the heart. Shakespeare.

May we, with the warrant of womanhood, and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any further revenge? Shakespeare.

If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true. John.
Many bare false witness, but their witness agreed not. Milk.

Nor was long his witness unconfuted. Milton.
Ye moon and stars, bear witness to the truth!
His only crime, if friendship can offend,
Is too much love to his unhappy friend. Dryden.
Our senses bear witness to the truth of each other's report, concerning the existence of sensible things. Locke.

2. One who gives testimony.

The king's attorney
Urg'd on examinations, proofs, contentions
Of diverse witnesses. Shakespeare.

With me, best witness of thy virtue tried. Milton.
A fat benefice became a crime, and witness too against its incumbent. Deacy of Piety.
Nor need I speak my deeds, for these you see;
The sun and day are witnesses for me. Dryden.

3. With a WITNESS. Effectually; to a great degree, so as to leave some lasting mark or testimony behind. A low phrase.

Here was a blessing handed out with the first pairs of animals at their creation; and it had effect with a witness. Woodward.

Now gall is bitter with a witness;
And love is all delight and sweetness. Prior.

To WITNESS. v. a. [from the noun.] To attest; to tell with asseveration.

There ran a rumour
Of many worthy fellows that were out,
Which was to my belief witness'd the rather,
For that I saw the tyrant's power a-foot. Shakespeare.
Though by the father he were hir'd to this,
He ne'er could witness any touch or kiss. Donne.
These be those discourses of God, whose effects show that live witness in themselves; the sensible in their sensible natures, the reasonable in their reasonable souls. Raleigh.

To WITNESS. v. n. To bear testimony.

The sea strive with the winds which should be londer, and the sounds of the ship, with a ghastly noise, to them that were in it witness'd that their run was the wager of the others caution. Sidney.

Mine eye doth his effigies witness
Most truly liv'd and living in your face. Shaksp.
Witness, you ever-burning lights above!
You elements that clip us round about!
Witness that here Iago murther'd give
The execution of his villainous and heart
To Othello's service. Shakespeare.

Shall witness I have done to you. Shakespeare.

The times witness to them. Shakespeare.

VOL.

Another fourth witness of me, and I know that the witness which he witnesseth of me is true. John.

as, a quick witted boy.

WITTICISM. n. f. [from witty.] A mean attempt at wit. This word Dryden in-novated. 'A mighty witticism, pardon a new word.' Dryden's preface to the State of Innocence.

We have a libertine tooling even in his last agonies, with a witticism between his teeth, without any regard to sobriety and confidence. Jefferson.

He is full of conceptions, points of epigram, and witticisms, all which are below the dignity of heroic verse. Addison.

WITTI. adv. [from witty.]

1. Ingeniously; cunningly; artfully.

But is there any other beast that lives,
Who his own harm to wittily contrives? Dryden.

2. With flight of imagination.

In conversation wittily pleasant, pleasantly game-some. Sidney.

The old hermit, that never saw pen and ink, very wittily said to a niece of king Gorbodach, that that is, is. Shakespeare.

Obstinate contemners of all helps and arts, such as, precluding on their natural parts, dare deride all diligence, and seem to mock at the terms when they understand not the things, think that way to get off wittily with their ignorance. Pen Jon.

WITTINESS. n. f. [from witty.] The quality of being witty.

No less doth his wittiness in devising, his plumess in witting, his pastoral rudeness, and his moral wisdom. Spenser.

WITTINGLY. adv. [from witting, knowing; prean, Saxon, to weet or know.] Knowingly; not ignorantly; with knowledge; by design.

Whatever we work as men, the same we do wittingly work and freely; neither are we, according to the manner of natural agents, any way so tied, but that it is in our power to leave things we do undone. Hooker.

Withhold revenge, 'tis not my fault,
Nor wittingly have I infring'd my vow. Shaksp.

During that dreadful surge, every particular accident for broke and broke past over. Kneller.

Hanging and wiving goes by destiny. Shakespeare.

A shop of all qualities that man loves woman for;
besides that hook of wiving, fairness, which strikes
the eye. Shakespeare.

Design or chance makes others wive,
But nature did this match contrive. Wallar.

To WIVE. v. a.

1. To match to a wife.

She dying gave it me;
And bid me, when my fate would have me wiv'd,
To give it her. Shakespeare.

2. To take for a wife.

If he have the condition of a saint, and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should strive me than wive me. Shakespeare.

WIVELY. adv. [from wive.] It were written more analogically wifely, that is, wife-like. Belonging to a wife.

Basilius could not abstain from praising Parthenia as the perfect picture of a womanly virtue, and wively truthfulness.

WIVES. n. f. The plural of wife.

A man of his learning should not so lightly have been carried away with old wives tales, from the providence of his own reason. Spenser.

WIZARD. n. f. [from wife.] A conjurer;
an inchanter; a he witch. It had probably at first a laudable meaning.

Patience, good lady; wizards know their times. Shakespeare.

He hearkens after prophecies and dreams,
And from the cross-row plucks the letter G;
And says, a wizard told him that by G
his wife disinherited should be. Shakespeare.

Thou darest offend, bid in thy disguise,
By certain words I know, and meet thy end, are my words should prevent thy end, in my end, thy end, thy end, thy end.

The prophecies of wizards
Inwardly bid terror, and her fall foretold. Wallar.

The wily wizard must be caught,
For, unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for naught. Dryden.

WO. n. f. [pa, Saxon.]

1. Grief; sorrow; misery; calamity.

6 M

The king is mad; how stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up and have ingenuous feeling
Of my huge sorrows! better I were distract;
So should my thoughts be fever'd from my griefs;
And woe, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakespeare.
So many miseries have crush'd my voice,
That my wearied tongue is still. Shakespeare.
Her rash hand in evil hour
Forth reaching to the fruit, Eve pluck'd the eat:
Earth felt the wound; and nature from her seat
Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe
That all was lost. Milton.
O'er dreary wastes they weep each other's woe. Pope.

2. It is often used in denunciations, woe be;
or in exclamations of sorrow, wo is; understand wo worth; pu pun'd, Saxon.
All is but lip wisdom which wants experience: I saw, wo is we, do try what love can do. Sidney.
Wo is my heart;
That poor soldier, that so richly fought,
Whole rage shan'd gild'd arms, whose naked breast
Stept before shields of proof, cannot be found. Shakespeare.

Many of our princes, woe the while!
Lie drown'd and sink'd in mercenary blood. Shakespeare.

Happy are they which have been my friends;
and woe to my lord chief justice. Shakespeare.
How ye, woe worth the day. Shakespeare.
Wo be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves. Ezekiel.
Wo is me for my hurt, my wound is grievous. Jeremiah.

He took and laid it by, and wept for woe. Chapman.

If God be such a being as I have described, woe to the world if it were without him: this would be a thousand times greater loss to mankind than the extinguishing of the sun. Tillotson.
Woe to the vanquish'd, woe!
Dryden.

3. A denunciation of calamity; a curse.
Can there be a woe or curse in all the stores of vengeance equal to the malignity of such a practice, of which one single instance could involve all mankind in one contusion? South.

4. Wo seems in phrases of denunciation or imprecation to be a substantive, and in exclamation an adjective; as particularly in the following lines, which seem improper and ungrammatical.

Woe are we, fir! you may not live to wear
All your true followers out. Shakespeare.
WOOD, n. f. [pab, Sax. glafum, Lat.] A plant cultivated for the dyes, who use it for the foundation of many colours. Miller.

In times of old, when British nymphs were known
To love no foreign fashions like their own;
When dress was modest, and fig-leaves the mode,
And quality put on no paint but woad. Garth.
WOEBEGONE, adj. [wo and begone.] Lost in wo; distracted in wo; overwhelmed with sorrow.

Such a man,
So dull, so dead in look, so woebegone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
And would have told him how his Troy was burn'd;
But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue. Shakespeare.

Who so woebegone
For Ochy, as the life of ancient Avalon? Dryden.
Tattered he saw his life's joy set as naught,
So woebegone was he with pain of love. Pope.

Woe. The obsolete participle passive from woe.

A braver choice of dauntless spirits,
Than now the English bottoms have woe,
Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakespeare.

WO'FUL, adj. [wo and full.]

1. Sorrowful; afflicted; mourning.
The woful Gynecia, to whom rest was no ease, had left her loathed lodging, and gotten herself into the solitary places those defence were full of. Sidney.

How many woful widows left to bow
To sad disgrace!

In a tower, and never to be loos'd,
The woful captive kinsmen are inclus'd. Dryden.

2. Calumnious; afflictive.
Wifful extravagance ends in woful want. Proverbs.

O woful day! O day of woe!
3. Wretched; paltry; sorry.

What woful fruit this madrigal would be,
In some flatter'd hackney-fornicateer, or me?
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens! how the style refines! Pope.

WO'FULLY, adv. [from woful].

1. Sorrowfully; mournfully.
2. Wretchedly; in a sense of contempt.

He who would pass such a judgment upon his condition, as shall be confirmed at that great tribunal, from which there lies no appeal, will find himself wofully deceived, if he judges of his spiritual estate by any of these measures. South.

WO'FULNESS, n. f. [from woful.] Misery;
calamity.

WOLD, n. f. Wold, whether singly or jointly, in the names of places, signifies

That man who hath a tongue is no man,
If with his tongue he cannot win a woman. Shakespeare.
Thou dotard, thou art as man-ir'd, unrooted
By thy dame Parlet here. Shakespeare.

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shakespeare.

And Abimelech took men servants and women servants. Genesis.

O woman, lovely woman, nature form'd thee
To temper man: we had been brutes without thee. Quincy.

Ceneus a woman once, and once a man;
But ending in the sex the first began. Dryden.

Women are made as they themselves would chafe,
Too proud to ask, too humble to relate. Garth.

Women in their nature are much more gay and joyous than men; whether it be that their blood is more refined, their fibres more delicate, and their animal spirits more light; vivacity is the gift of woman, gravity that of men. Addison.

2. A female attendant on a person of rank.

I could not personally deliver to her
What you commanded me; but by her woman
I sent your message. Shakespeare.

And think it no addition, nor my wish,
To have him see me woman'd. Shakespeare.

WOMANHATER, n. f. [woman and hater.]

One that has an aversion for the female sex.

How could it come into your mind,
To pitch on me, of all mankind,
Against the sex to write a satire,
And brand me for a womanhater? Swift.

WO'MANHEAD, } n. f. [from woman.] WO'MANHOOD, } The character and collective qualities of a woman. Obsolete.

Ne in her speech, ne in her haviour,
Was lightness seen, or looser vanity.

But gracious womanhood and gravity. Spenser.

There dwells sweet love and constant chastity,
Unspotted faith, and comely womanhood.

Regard of honour, and mild modesty. Spenser.

'Tis present death I beg; and one thing more,
That womanhood denies my tongue to tell:
O keep me from their works than killing lust. Shakespeare.

When my grace is broke up again,
Some second guest to entertain;

For graves have learn'd that womanhead,
To be to more than one a bed. Douglas.

TO WOMANISE, r. a. [from woman.] To emaculate; to effeminate; to soften.

Proper, but not used.

a man. Sidney.

WO'MANISH, adj. [from woman.] Suitable to a woman; having the qualities of a woman; resembling a woman.

Neither do I wear a woman's apparel, I wear a woman's mind; since I assure you, there is more in me than falls to be the Zelmira making a woman to be the armour of her boldness, giving to the lips

Her father brought her to keep her speech
While within the paradise of her mind. Shakespeare
A voice not soft, weak, piping, and womanish, but audible, strong, and manlike. Ashmole
She then to him these womanish words 'gan say.
For love of me, leave off. Spenser

Our fathers minds are dead,
And we are govern'd with our mothers spirits;
Our yoke and suff'rance thus is womanish. Shakespeare

He never was so womanish. Shakespeare

During his banishment, he was so softened and dojected, as he wrote nothing but a few womanish epistles. Bacon

In a sad look or womanish complaint.
I melt to womanish tears, and if I stay,
I find my love my courage will betray. Dryden

The godlike hero in his breast
Diffid'd, or was ashamed to show
So weak, to womanish a foe. Dryden

WOMAN'S D. n. f. [woman and kind.]

The female sex; the race of women.
Mulidorus had over bitterly glanced against the reputation of womankind. Sidney

So early is I appreciate the stormy wind
Of malice, in the calm of pleasant womankind.
Spenser

Because thou dost sit on womankind, admiring
Their shape, their colour, and attractive grace,
None are, thou thinkst, but taken with such toys. Milton

Each inconvenience makes their virtue cold;
But womankind in ill is ever bold. Dryden

Juba might make the proudest of our sex,
Any of womankind but Marcia, happy. Addison
She advanc'd, that womankind
Would by her model form their mind. Swift

WOMANLY. adj. [from woman.]

1. Becoming a woman; suiting a woman;
feminine; not masculine.

I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudable; to do good sometime Accounted dangerous folly; why then, alas!
Do I put up that womanly defence,
To say I'd done no harm? Shakespeare

She brings your toward wives,
As prisoners, to her womanly persuasion. Shakespeare
All will tip in thy face

A blushing womanly discovering grace. Donne
Rage chokes my words; 'tis womanly to weep. Dryden complained of in England, and wondered at in other countries. Spenser

His deadly wound was healed: and all the world wondered after the heal. Revelations

No wonder to us, who have conversed with too many strange actions, how to wonder at any thing:
wonder is from surprise, and surprise ceases upon experience. South

King Tarnus wonder'd at the sight review'd.
Dryden

Who can wonder that the sciences have been to overcharged with insignificant and doubtful expressions, capable to make the most quick sighted little the more knowing? Lake

I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to mount and walk upon my body. Swift

WONDER. n. f. [pundrian, Saxon; wonder,
Dutch.]

1. A sensation; astonishment; amazement; surprise caused by something unusual or unexpected.

What is he, whose griefs
Bear such an emphasis; whose phrase of sorrow
Conjures the passions, and makes the mind find Like wonder, unbounded horrors. Shakespeare

Wonder, with astonishment, or an unmovable posture of the body; for in wonder the spirit is not as in fear, but only settled. South

2. Cause of wonder; a strange thing; something more or greater than can be expected.

The Cornish wonder-gatherers describeth the same. Carter

Great effects come of industry in civil business, and to try things out, and never to give over, doth wonder. Bacon

Lo, a wonder strange!
Of every bent, and bird, and insect small Cause is this, and pairs. Milton

What woman will you find,
Though of this age the wonder and the fame,
On whom his leisure will vouchsafe an eye
Of fond desire? Milton

No wonder sleep from careful lovers flies,
To battle himself in a child's eyes;
As far Altea once from earth to heav'n
By strife and loud inquiry was driven. Waller

Drawn for your price, that sword could wonder do:
The better cause makes wine the sharper now. Waller

It is no wonder if part of the matter of this disease, which so easily adheres to the glands, and augments and diffuses them to an unnatural danger, should at length stop in the lungs. Blackmore

3. Any thing mentioned with wonder.
There Babylon, the wonder of all tongues. Milton things must be done unjustly, that many things may be done justly.

I this night have dream'd,

If dream'd, not as I sit an wont, of thee,

But of offence and trouble.

The eagle's fate and mine are one,

Which on the first that made him die

Epy'd a father of his own,

Wherewith he wont to tour to high

For others that he law perplex'd about the manage of then difficult affairs, he was wont to ask them, when they would begin to trust God, or persuade him to govern the world?

A mother was wont always to indulge her daughters, when any of them desired tiquels or birds, but then they must keep them well.

WO'NTLESS. adj. [from wont.] Unaccustomized; unusual. Obsolete.

Whether, love, wilt thou now carry me?

What wontless fury dost thou now inspire

Into my feeble breast, when full of thee?

To Woo. v. a. [apogob, courted, Sax.]

1. To court; to sue for love.

We cannot fight for love, as men may do;

We should be woo'd, and were not made to woo.

Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes

Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,

As 'twere in form of eyes, reflecting gems;

That woo'd to the dimy bottom of the deep,

And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by.

Fancies and notions he pursues,

Which ne'er had being but in thought:

Each like the Grecian artist wows

The image he himself has wrought.

My proud rival wows

Another partner to his throne and bed.

How is the loosestone, nature's subtle pride,

By the rude iron woo'd, and made a bride.

Oh stretch thy reign, fair peace! from thine to shore,

Till conquest cease, and slavery be no more;

Till the freed Indians in their native groves

Reap their own fruits, and wove their fable loves.

2. To court solicitously; to invite with importunity.

Yet can the love a foreign emperor,

Whom of great worth and pow'r the hears to be;

If the he woo'd but by ambassador.

Or but his letters or his pictures see:

So while the virgin soul on earth doth stay,

She woo'd and tempted is ten thousand ways

By these great pow'rs which on the earth bear sway.

The wisdom of the world, wealth, pleasure, praise.

Sweet bird, that shunn'd the noise of folly,

Moft musical, most melancholy!

Thee, chauntress oft the woods among,

I woo to hear thy even-song.

Many years it hath continued, standing by no

Children should not know any wickedness. Old folks have discretion, and know the world. Shakespeare.
 What, start at this! when sixty years have spread
 Their grey experience o'er thy hoary head?
 Is this the all observing age could gain?
 Or hast thou known the world so long in vain? Dryden.

If knowledge of the world makes man perditionous,
 May I but ever live in ignorance. Addison.

The evil might pass, if we could get her
 To know the world a little better;
 To know the world! a modern phrase
 For vices, ombrage, balls, and plays. Swift.

13. Every thing that the world contains.
 Had I know a thousand worlds, I would give them all for one year more, that I might present to God one year of such devotion and good works, as I never before to much as intended. Law.

 deeply bent in the trade of ordinary worldlings,
 as for respect of gain to let to much time pass? Sid.

The one sort are named the brethren, the godly;
 the other worldlings, time-servers, and pleasers of men more than pleasers of God. Hooker.

God of the world and worldlings,
 Great Mammon! greatest god below the sky. Spenser.

For his weeping in the needle's stream;
 Poor dear, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
 As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
 To that which had too much. Shakespeare.

That other on his friends his thoughts bestows;
 The covetous worldling, in his anxious mind,
 Thinks only for the wealth he left behind. Dryden.

If we consider the expectations of futurity, the worldling gives up the argument. Rogers.

Worldly, adj. [from world.]

1. Secular; relating to this life, in contra-distinction to the life to come.

He is divinely bent to meditation;
 And in no worldly lusts would he be moved.
 To draw him from his holy exercise. Shakespeare.

Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command?
 The fortitude of a christian consists in patience;
 not in enterprises which the poets call heroic, and which are commonly the effects of interest, pride, and worldly honour. Dryden.

Compare the happiness of men and beasts no farther than it results from worldly advantages.

As to worldly affairs, which my friends thought so heavy upon me, they are none of them of our own making, and fall away as soon as we know ourselves. Low.

 By simply meek. Milton.

This cannot be done, if my will be worldly or voluptuously disposed. South.

Since your mind is worldly bent,
 Therefore of the two gifts in my dispose,
 Think ere you speak, I grant you leave to choose. Dryden.

Worm, n. f. [pynm, Sax. worm, Dutch;
 vermis, Latin.]

1. A small hairless serpent that lives in the earth.

Both the princes
 Thy broken faith hath made a prey to worms. Shakespeare.

Help me into some house,
 For I shall faint! A plague of both your houses!
 They have made worms meat of me. Shakespeare.

Though worms devour me, though I turn to mold,
 Yet in my teeth I shall his face behold:
 I from my marble monument shall rise
 Again intire, and see him with these eyes. Shakespeare.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
 Infect or worm. Milton.

 Nor from the dust of old oblivion rak'd. Shakespeare.

6. Something tormenting.

The worm of conscience had begnaw thy soul.
 The chains of darkness, and th' undying worm. Milton.

7. Any thing vermiculated, or turned round; any thing spiral.

The threads of screws, when bigger than can be made in iron-pieces, are called worms. The length of a worm begins at the one end of the spirale, and end at the other; the breadth of the spirale is contained between any two grooves on the spirale, the depth of the worm is cut into the diameter of the spirale, vs. the depth between the outside of the worm, and the bottom of the groove. Morton.

To worm, v. n. [from the noun.] To work slowly, secretly, and gradually.

 perhaps as by a screw.

For his worm, nobody knows what, under his tongue, which is said to prevent him, nobody knows why, from running mad. Shakespeare.

5. Old; worthless.

This chamber ~~was~~ ^{was} d about with rolls,
And old records from ancient times deriv'd;
Some made in books, some in long parchment
scrolls,
That were all wormeaten, and full of canker holes

Things among the Greeks, which antiquity had worn out of knowledge, were called agya, which we call wormeaten, or of defaced date. Raleigh.
Thine's like wormeaten trunks cloth'd in lead's skin;
Or grave, that's dust without, and flunk within.

Donne.
WORMWOOD. n. f. [from its virtue to kill worms in the body; perhaps properly wormwort.] A plant.

Wormwood hath an indeterminate stalk, branching out into many small shoots, with spikes of naked showers hanging downward; the leaves are hoary and bitter. Of this plant there are thirty-two species, one of which, the common wormwood, grows in the roads, but it is also planted in gardens for common use. Great variety of ten wormwoods are found in the salt marshes of England, and sold in the markets for the true Roman wormwood, though they differ greatly. Miller.

She was wean'd; I had then laid Wormwood to my dog. Shakespeare.
Pituitous cacochymia must be corrected by bitters, as wormwood wine. Floyer.

I ask whether one be not invincibly conscious to himself of a different perception, when he actually tastes wormwood, or only thinks on that favour? Locke.

WORMY. adj. [from worm.] Full of worms.

Spirits that in crossways and floods have burial,
Already to their wormy beds are gone. Shakespeare.
Yet can I not persuade me thou art dead,
Or that thy corse corrupt in earth's dark womb,
Or that thy beauties lie in wormy bed. Milton.

WORN. part. pass. of wear. Worn out is quite consumed.

His is a maiden shield,
Guileless in fight; none batter'd, new'd, and ho'd,
Born out of torvice, must fortake his lord. Dryden.
What I now offer, is the wretched remainder of a sickly age, worn out with study, and oppress'd by fortune. Dryden.

The greatest part of mankind are given up to labour, whose lives are worn out only in the provisions for living. Locke.

Your cold hypocrisy 's a idle device,
A worn-out trick; wouldst thou be thought in earnest,
Cloath thy tongue'd zeal in rage, in fire, in fury

WORME. n. f.
In the backs of cows, in the summer, are maggots generated, which in Essex we call worme, being first only a small knot in the skin. Darwin.

To WORRY. v. a. [from worry, Sax. whence perhaps the word worry.]

1. To tear, or mangle, as a beast tears its prey.

It we, with three such powers left at home,
Cannot defend our own doors from the dog,
Let us be worried. Shakespeare.

The fury of the tumults might fly so high as to worry and tear those in pieces, whom as yet they but played with in their power. King Charles.

'Tis no new thing for the dogs that are, to keep the wolves from worrying the sheep, to be delivered up to the enemy, for fear the sheep should worry
the wolves. Elfridge.

This revives and unites that inhuman barbarity of the old heathen persecutors, wrapping up christians in the skins of wild beasts, that to they might be worried and torn in pieces by dogs. South.

2. To harass, or persecute brutally.

Then embraces his son-in-law, then again worries his daughter with clipping her. Shakespeare.

For want of words, or lack of breath,
Witness when I was worried with thy peals. Milton.

It has pleased Providence at length to give us righteousness instead of execution, and hopes of religion to a church worried with reformation. South.

All his own
Was to preserve me from the barbarous rage,
Which worried him only for being mute. Southey.
I shall not suffer him to worry my man's reputation, nor indeed fall on any person whatsoever.

Let them rail,
And worry one another at their pleasure. Rous.
Madam, contrive and invent,
And worry him out, till he gives his consent. Swift.
WORSE. adj. The comparative of bad:
bad, worse, worst. [pyr, Saxon.] More bad; more ill.

Why should he see your faces worse liking than the children of your sort? Daniel.
In happiness and misery, the question still remains, how men come often to prefer the worse to the better, and to chide that, which, by their own confession, has made them noticable? Locke.

WORSE. adv. In a manner more bad.
The more one sickens, the worse it eats he is.

The WORSE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The loss; not the advantage; not the better.

But some times had the worse, and lost by war.

Judah was put to the worse before Hamei, and they fled to their tents. 2 Kings.

2. Something less good.

A man, whatever are his professions, always thinks the worse of a woman, who forgives him for making an attempt on her virtue. Clarissa.

To WORSE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To put to disadvantage. This word, though analogical enough, is not now used.

Perhaps more valid arms,
Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
May serve to better us, and worse our foes. Milton.

WORSE. adj. A barbarous word, formed by corrupting worse with the usual comparative termination.

Gods! take my breath from me,
For not my worse spirit tempt me again
To die before you please. Shakespeare.

A dreadful question is, how worse far
Thou art, a fallen creature, for war. Dryden.

WORSHIP. n. f. [pyr, prospere, Saxon.] or collection of human persons professing faith in Christ, gathered together in several places of the world for the worship of the same God, and united into the same corporation. Philo.

He was'd a weak idiot, and, madly vain,
Sought godlike worship to a mortal train. Dryden.

The worship of God is an eminent part of religion; and prayer is a chief part of religious worship: hence religion is described by seeking God.

There was a voyage of the Egyptians under Osiris up the Nile, from them the Suez had their worship of Isis. Arbuthnot.

6. Honour; respect; civil deference.

The humble guest shall have worship in the presence of those who sit at meat with him. Lake.

Since God hath appointed government among men, it is plain that his intention was, that some kind of worship should be given from some to others; for where there is a power to punish and reward, there is a foundation of worship in those who are under that power; which worship lies in expecting a due return to that power, by a care not to provoke it, and an endeavour to obtain the favour of it, which,
among all kinds, is called civil worship. Scotting.

7. Idolatry of lovers; submissive respect.

'Tis not your inkly brows, your black silk hair,
Your biggle eyeballs, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entice my spirit to your worship. Shakespeare.

To WORSHIP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adore; to honour or venerate with religious rites.

Thou shalt worship no other God. Exodus.

His matter to you, as worshipfully he terms it,
Shall lose the royalty of England's throne. Shakespeare.

WORSHIPPER. n. f. [from worship.] Adorer;
one that worships.

What art thou that idol ceremony?
What kind of god's that taller than I more

Of mortal greatness than I myself? Shakespeare.
Those places did not confine the immensity of God, nor give his worshippers a nearer approach to heaven by their height.

If posterity takes its notions of us from our memors, they must fancy one of our kings paid a great devotion to Minerva, that another was a professed worshipper of Apollo. Addison.

By sanctifying the seventh day after they had laboured six, they assumed themselves worshippers of that only God who created heaven and earth.

Worst. adj. [the superlative of bad, formed from worfe; bad, worfe, worst.] Most bad; most ill.

WO'XEX. The participle of To war. Obsolete.

WRACK. n. f. [wrack, Dut. præce, Sax. a wreck. The poets use wrack or wreck indifferently, as rhyme requires; the later writers of prose commonly wreck. See WRACK.]

1. Destruction of a ship by winds or rocks.

Now with full sails into the port I move,

And safely can unlade my breast of love,

Quiet and calm: why should I then go back,

To tempt the second hazard of a wreck?

2. Ruin; destruction. This is the true

Saxon meaning.

With use of evil, growing more and more evil,

they took delight in slaughter, and pleased themselves in making others wrack the effect of their power.

A world devote to universal wrack.

To WRACK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To destroy in the water; to wreck.

See WRACK.

2. It seems in Milton to mean, to rock;

to shake.

Each on his rock transfix'd, the sport and prey

Of wrecking whirlwinds.

3. To torture; to torment. This is commonly written rack; and the instrument of torture always rack.

Merab rejoic'd in her wrack'd lover's pain,

And tortur'd her virtue with disdain.

Pharaoh's and Joseph's dreams are oftentimes wrack'd beyond their symbolization.

To WRANGLE. v. a. [from wrangle, Dutch, Mishew; wrong, Skinner.] To dispute peevishly; to quarrel perversely;

to altercate; to quarrel.

Ye, for a score of knaves, would wrangle,

and could call it fair play.

His passion his clear spirit; and in such cases

Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,

Though great ones are their object.

How wounding a spectacle is it to see those, who were by Christ designed for shepherds of men, picking up shells on the shore, and unually wrangling

about them too!

In incomplete ideas we impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others.

Amongst unthinking men, who examine not scrupulously ideas, but confound them with words,

there must be endless dispute and wrangling.

His great application to the law had not infected his temper with any thing litigious, he did not know what it was to wrangle on indifferent points.

Fill'd with the sense of age, the fire of youth,

A scorn of wrangling, yet a zeal for truth.

And all the question, wrangle e'er so long.

Is only this, if God has plac'd him wrong?

He advises therefore to set aside all logical wrangling, and to produce the testimonies of the antients.

7. Perhaps the properly be raped, though wrapped is now frequently used in this sense.

Wrapt up in silent fear he lies.

Wrapp'd in amice the matrons wildly dance.

WRAPPER. n. f. [from wrap.]

1. One that wraps.

2. That in which any thing is wrapped.

My arms were prest to my side, and my legs cloied together by so many wrappers, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy.

WRATH. n. f. [pnas, Saxon; wreed,

Danish; wreed, cruel, Dutch.] Anger, fury; rage.

Thou dost the prayers of the righteous seed

Present before the majestic divine.

And his avenging wrath to clemency incline.

With one fool's head I came to woo,

But I go away with two:

Sweet, adieu! I'll keep my oath,

Patently to bear my wrath.

I fear, lest there be debates, envyings, wranks, strifes.

He hop'd not to escape, but thus

The pretent, fearing guilty what his wrath

Might suddenly inflict.

Achilles' wrath, to Greece the direful spring

Of woes unnumber'd, heavenly goddess! ung.

WRATHFUL. adj. [wrath and full.] Angry;

furious; raging.

He cried, as raging seas are wont to roar,

When wat'ry storm his wrathful wreck dash threat.

Fly from wrath:

Sad be the fights, and bitter fruits of war,

And thousand turies wait on a wrathful sword.

How now? your wrathful weapons drawn!

The true evangelical zeal should abound more in the mild and good-natured affections, than in vehement and wrathful passions.

WRATHFULLY. adv. [from wrathful.]

Furiously; passionately.

Gentle friends,

Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully.

WRATHLESS. adj. [from wrath.] Free from anger.

Before his feet to sheep and lions lay,

Fearless and wrathless, while the y heard him play

To WREAK. v. a. old preterit and part.

pass. wroke and wroken, now wreaked.

It is likely that the word wrought, which is only used in the past tense, is originally the preterit of wreak. [præcan,

Sax. wrecken, Dutch; recken, German.]

1. To revenge.

In an ill hour thy foes thee hither sent,

Another's wrongs to wreak upon thyself.

Him all that while occasion did provoke

Against Pyrocles, and new matter train'd

Upon the old, him stirring to be wroke

Of his late wrongs.

Pale death our valiant leader hath oppos'd;

Come wreak his loss, whom bootless ye complain.

You could pursue

The son of Perops then, and did the goddess stir

That villany to wreak the tyrant did to her.

2. To execute any violent design. This is the sense in which it is now used.

On we let death wreak all his rage.

He left the dame,

Resolv'd to spare her life, and save her shame,

But that detested object to remove.

To wreak his vengeance, and to cure her love.

Think how you drove him hence, a wandering exile;

To distant climes; then think what certain vengeance

His rage may wreak on your unhappy orphan.

Smith.

1. To wreck his fortune away.

To wreck his fortune on the desol'd prey. Pope.
3. It is corruptly written for reck, to heed; to care.

My mother is of churlish disposition,
And thus wrecks to find the way to heav'n
My dear deeds of hospitality. Shakspeare

WRECK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Revenge; vengeance. Obsolete.

Fortune, mine avowed foe,
Her wrathful wrecks themselves do now allay. Spenser.

Join with the Goths, and with revengeful war
Take a wreck on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine. Shakspeare.
Some ill's behind, rude chance, for thee to bear;
That fear'd not to devour thy guests, and break
All laws of humanity; Jove lends thee one wrecker. Chapman.

2. Passion; furious fit. Obsolete.

What and it
His sorrows have to overwhelm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wrecks,
His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness? Shakspeare.
WREATHFUL. adj. [from wreck.] Revengeful; angry. Not in use.

Call the creatures,
Whose naked natures live in all the spite
Of wreathful heaven. Shakspeare.
She in Olympus' top
Must visit Vulcan for new arms, to forge her a wreathful son. Chapman

WRECKLESS. adj. [I know not whether this word be miswritten for reckless, careless; or comes from wreck, revenge, and means unrevengeful.]

So flies the wreckless shepherd from the wolf;
So first the harmless cock doth yield his throat,
And next his throat unto the butcher's knife. Shakspeare

WREATH. n. f. [wreath, Saxon.]

1. Any thing curled or twisted.
The wreath of three was made a wreath of five to these three tributes of the two hours, were added the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon

Clouds began
To darken all the hill, and smoke to roll
In dusky wreaths red-tinged flames. Milton.
He of his tortuous train
Could many a wondrous wreath. Milton

Let athenian
And athenian guma, and spice, and incense roll
Their fragrant wreaths to heav'n. Smith.

2. A garland; a chaplet.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments. Shakspeare.

Dropp'd from his head, a wreath lay on the ground. Beaumont.

The boughs of Lotus, form'd into a wreath,
This monument thy maiden beauty's due,
High on a plane-tree shall be hung to view. Dryden.

When for thy head the garland I prepare,
A second wreath shall bind Amata's hair;
And when my choicest songs thy worth proclaim,
Alternate verse shall bless Amata's name. Prior.
To WREATH. v. a. preterit wreathed; part. pass. wreathed, wreathen. [from the noun.]

1. To curl; to twist; to convolve.
Long lay he Did never forget for her sake compile,
Nor ever laid his wreathed arms aspart
His loving bosom, to keep down his heart. Shakspeare

About his neck
A green and golden locke had wreath'd itself,
Who with her death, mumble, in the air approach'd
The opening of a mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Calisto, it unlock'd itself,
And with intended groans did slip away. Shakspeare.
The beard of an oak is wreath'd at the bottom and one smooth entire arm at the top; they take only the part that is wreath'd, and cut off the other. Bacon

2. It is here used for to writhe.

Impatient of the wound,
He rolls and wreaths his shining body round;
Then headlong shoots beneath the dashing tide. Gay.

3. To interweave; to entwine one in another.

Two chains of pure gold, of wreathen work,
Shall thou make them, and fasten the wreathen chains to the oaches. Exodus

As snakes breed in dunghills not singly, but in knots, so in such baleful hearts you shall ever see pride and ingratitude indivisibly wreathen and twisted together. South

4. To encircle as a garland.

In the flowers that wreath the sparkling bowl Fell adders hiss, and poisonous serpents roil. Prior.
5. To encircle as with a garland; to dress in a garland.

For thee she feeds her hair,
And with thy winding my *wreath*s her lance. Dryden.

The soldier, from successful camps returning,
With laurel wreath'd and rich with hostile spoil, Saves the bull to Mars. Prior.

To WREATH. v. n. To be interwoven;
to be intertwined.

Here, where the labourer's hands have form'd
a bow,
Of wreathing trees, in singing waste an hour. Dryden

WREATHY. adj. [from wreath.] Spiral; curled; twisted.

That which is preserved at St. Dennis, near Paris, hath wreathy tapers, and cochlear turnings about, which agree with the description of an unicorn's horn in Adam. Brown.

WRECK. n. f. [wreck, Saxon, a miserable person; wrecke, Dutch, a ship broken.]

1. Destruction by being driven on rocks or shallows at sea; destruction by sea.
Fair be ye sure; but hard and obstinate,
As is a rock amidst the raging floods;
'Gainst which a ship, of succour desolate,
Doth under wreck both of herself and goods. Spenser.

Like those that see their wreck
Even on the rocks of death, and yet they strain,
That death may not thus idly find 'em attend
To their uncertain talk, but work to meet their end. Daniel.

Think not that flying fame reports my fate,
I present, I appear, and my own wreck relate. Dryden.

2. Diffolution by violence.

Not only Parolite,
In this communion, but the flaring cope
Had gone to wreck. Milton.
The soul shall flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amidst the war of elements,
The wreck of matter, and the crash of worlds. Addison.

3. Ruin; destruction.

Whether he was Combin'd with Norway, or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage, or that with both
He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know not. Shakspeare.

4. It is misprinted here for wreck.

He cried wrecking seas are wont to rear,
When winter turns his wrathful wreck doth threat. Spenser

5. The thing wrecked: as, the ship was considered as a wreck.

To WRECK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To destroy by nothing on rocks or sands.
Have the rocks many more such tempests wherein the bath wretchedly been wrecked? Spenser.

A poet's thumb,
Wreck'd as he did come. Shakspeare.
The coral found growing upon wrecked ships and lost anchors, that are daily dragged up out of the sea, demonstrates that coral continues to be formed to this day. Woodward.

2. To ruin.

Weak and envious, if they should conspire,
They wreck themselves, and he hath his desire. Daniel.

3. In the following passages it is ignorantly used for wreck, in its different senses of revenge and execute.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen. Shakspeare.

I faint! I die! the goddess cried:
O cruel, couldst thou find none other
To wreck thy spleen on, parasite?
Take Neve, thou hast slain thy mother. Prior.

To WRECK. v. n. To suffer wreck.

With manly objects we must try
His constancy, with such as have more show
Of worth, of honour, glory, and popular praise,
Rocks whereon greatest men have often wreck'd. Milton.

WREN. n. f. [wrenna, Saxon; regulus,
Latin.] A small bird.

The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. Shakspeare.

All ages have conceived that the wren is the least of birds; yet the discoverers of America have showed us one far less, the hum-bird, not much exceeding a beetle. Brown.

To WRENCH. v. a. [wringan, Saxon; wringhen, Dutch.]

1. To pull by violence; to wrest; to force.

Wrench his sword from him. Shakspeare.
Oh torn!
How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit,
If rough were from tools, and tie the water souls
To thy false seeming! Shakspeare.
Give me that mattock and the wrenching iron. Shakspeare.

Cesar's army, wanting something, demanded a million of discharge, with no intention it should be granted; but thought by that means to wrench him to their other defects. Bacon.
Sing the Parthian, when transfar'd he lies,
Wrenching the Roman javelin from his thighs. Dryden.

Struggling to get loose, I broke the strings, and wrenched out the pegs that fasten'd my arm to the ground. Swift.

2. To sprain; to distort.

O most small fault,
How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!
Which, like an engine, wrench'd my frame of nature
From the true place; drew from my heart all love.
And added to the gall. Shakspeare.
You wrenched your foot against a stone, and were forced to fly. Swift.

WRENCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A violent pull or twist.

2. A sprain.
Some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench, the whole leg thereby loses its strength. Locke.

3. Wrenches, in Chaucer, signifies means, deights, subtilities; which is, I believe,
the sense here.

He resolved to make his profit of this business of Prison, as a quarrel for war, and that of Naples as a wrench and quarrel for peace. Bacon.

To WREST. v. a. [wrestan, Saxon.]

1. To twist; to violence; to extort by writings or force.

To wing this sentence, to wrench the hearts of men's hands the knowledge of God's doctrine, is without all reason. Affham.

To what wretched state refer'd,
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n,
To be thus wrung from us? Milton.

Where you charged in person, you were a wren- quarior: the rebels afterwards recovered strength, and wrested that victory from others that they had lost to you. Dryden.

Our country's cause,
That drew our swords, now wreaths 'em from our hands,
And bid us not delight in Roman blood
Unprofitably shed. Addison
O prince, I blush to think what I have said;
But fate has wreathed the confession from me
Addison.

2. To distort; to writhe; to force.
So far to extend their speeches is to wretch them against their meaning. Hobbes
My father's purposes have been mislaid,
And some about him have too lavishly
Wreathed his meaning and authority. Shakespeare
Wrest once the law to your authority,
To do a great right, do a little wrong. Shakespeare
WREST, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Distortion; violence.
Whereas it is concluded, out of weak prefaces, that the testimony of divers things in the church of England, which other reformed churches have cast out, must needs argue that we do not well, unless we can show that they have done ill; what needeth this wrest, to draw out from us an accusation of foreign churches? Hobbes

2. It is used in Spenser and Shakespeare for an active or moving power. I suppose, from the force of a tiler acting with his lance in his rest.

Adown he kept it with so puissant wrest,
That back again it did not rebound,
And gave against his mother earth a ground-swell sound. Spenser

Antenor's such a wrest in their affairs,
That their negotiations all must flacken,
Wanting his manage. London and Cressida

3. An instrument to tune.

WRESTER, n. f. [from wrest.] He who wrests.

To WRESTLE, v. n. [from wrest.]
1. To contend who shall throw the other down.

If ever he goes along again, I'll never wrestle for prize more. Shakespeare

Another, by a fall in wrestling, started the end of the clavicle from the acetabulum. Wylliam

To play or wrestle well, it should be aided with those that do it better. Temple

None in the leap spring with so strong a bound,
Or firmer in the wrestling press the ground. Pope

2. To struggle; to contend; followed by with.
I persuaded them, if they lov'd Benedick,
To with him wrestle with ambition,
And never to let Fortune know of it. Shakespeare
James knew not how to wrestle with contingencies, and to abhorred to be engaged in such. Careless

WRESTLER, n. f. [from wrestle.]
1. One who wrestles, one who professes the athletic art.

When the young wrestlers at their sport grew warm,

Old Milo wept to see his make I arm
'Tis not from whom, but where we live;

The place does oft those graces give:
Great Julius, on the mountains bred,
A flock perhaps, or herd, had led;
He, that the world subdued, had been
But the best wrestler on the green. Waller

2. One who contends in wrestling.
So earnest with thy God, new cure,
No sense of danger, interpose
The sacred wrestler, till a hold, but basting wrestler heavy in Waller.

Two wrestlers help to pull each other down.
Dryden

WRETCH, n. f. [wrecca, Saxon.]

1. A miserable mortal.
When I loved, I was a wretch. Accidence
She weeps, and says her Henry is deposed,
He smiles, and says his Edward is murthered,
That she, poor wretch, for grief can speak no more.
Shakespeare

The butcher takes away the calf,
And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strives. Shakespeare

Illustrious wretch! repine not, nor reply;
Vow not what heav'n ordains with reason's eye;
For bright the object is, the distance is too high. Prior

2. A worthless forry creature.
Base-minded wretches! are your thoughts to deeply buried in the trade of ordinary worldings, as for respect of gam-fane poultry-wolf may yield you, to let for much time pass without knowing perfectly her estate? 8 days

It is now
The wretch is poor in question, never saw I
But his wretch is, they say, they kiss the earth,
For with the wretch is, they say, they kiss the earth,
Till the wretch is, they say, they kiss the earth,
Should not be, they say, they kiss the earth, 8 days

3. It is used by way of flight, or nominal pity, or contempt.

When thou say'st, he wretch, doth go Poor wretch was never brought to;
He thought his wares were much too low,
O'erjoy'd they were so poor. Prior

Then, if thou say'st, he wretch, doth go
She wretch is, they say, they kiss the earth,
She wretch is, they say, they kiss the earth, 8 days

4. It is sometimes a word of tenderness, as we now say poor thing.

Excellent wretch. Shakespeare
Chabened but this, and that his wretch is, 8 days

The happy wretch the put into her bread. Shakespeare

WRETCHED, adj. [from wretch.]
1. Miserable; unhappy.

If we could judge to be most miserable, but that a wretch is, they say, they kiss the earth, nature hath bestowed ripe capacity, their wretch is, 8 days politeness seriously goeth about therewith to oppose hond God, as being not God. Hobbes

O cruel death! to those you are more kind
Than to the wretched mortals left behind. Waller

Why dost thou drive me
To range all o'er a waste and barren place,
To find a friend? The wretched way, no friends. Shakespeare

2. Calumnious; illusive.

3. Sore; painful; pained; wretched.

When God was served with wretched sacrifices, such was the miserable and wretched condition of men's souls, that the best of them, that wretch is, 8 days

being called out for their souls, it wretch is, 8 days

then folks, my poor, they wretch is, 8 days

not worth the keeping, they wretch is, 8 days

Wretchedness is the most wretched thing
That to contempt can empty feelings bring. Shakespeare

4. Despicable; hatefully contemptible.

An adventure worthy to be remembered for the united examples therein, as well of true natural goodness as of wretchedness. Shakespeare

WRETCHEDLY, adv. [from wretched.]
1. Miserably; unhappily.

From these two wars, wretchedly entered into the duke's ruin took its date. Shakespeare

2. Meanly; despicably.

When such little wretches wretchedly once to be tipped up, and laid open, how poorly and wretch is, 8 days

edly must that man wretch, who finds himself guilty and baffle I too. Shakespeare

WRETCHEDNESS, n. f. [from wretched.]
1. Misery; unhappiness; afflicted state.

My misery cannot be greater than it is; fear not the danger of my blind steps. I cannot fall worse than I am; and do not obstinately continue to infect thee with my wretchedness. Sidney

He can inquire
What hard mishap him brought to such distress,
And made that caut's thrall the thrall of wretched-
ness. Shakespeare

Clarion did at last
To lowest wretchedness; and it was then Such rancour in the hearts of mighty men?

When they are weary of wars, and brought down to extreme wretchedness, then they creep a little, and live for peace, till they have recovered their strength again. Shakespeare

I have not to see wretchedness overcharged,
And duty in his service perishing. Shakespeare

We live with the feeling lost the very memory of such wretchedness as our forefathers endured by their wars; fall others the most cruel. Raleigh

2. Pitiableness; despicableness.

WRETCHEDNESS, adj. [This is, by I know not whole corruption, written for reck.
Rex.] Careless; mindless; heedless.

For my own to put off his present repentance, on some point of a point of duty that his later reputation may have the turn, is the most wretched thing, and with no promise of merry amusement. Hammond

It seems to be circumpect a piety have been thus wretched, what a duty can there be for our own performance? Governance of the Tongue

WRETCHEDNESS, n. f. [from wretch.]

In sleep I heard him say, sweet Desdemona,
Let us be wary, let us hide our loves!
And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my hand. Shakespeare.

4. To writhe.

The filly owner of the goods
Weeps over them, and wrings his hands. Shakespeare.

5. To pinch.

The king began to find where his blood did him, and that it was his depeching the heart of York, that did rattle and wring the arteries of his people. Eden.

If he had not been too much moved, and by an uneasy and fright to him, he would have been an excellent man of business. Clarendon.

6. To force by violence; to extort.

That which is in my heart,
And drop me blood from my face, that I may
From the hard hands of peace, and wring it out.
By any indirect way. Shakespeare.

Who can be forced by any indirect way
To wring the woe from his soul, and night,
And have no other rest, than to be woe?
But that he was bound by a love in oath? Shakespeare.

That which I find in me,
Most other people find in me, I find in me,
Or wring it out of me. Shakespeare.

That which I find in me,
Most other people find in me, I find in me,
Or wring it out of me. Shakespeare.

7. To harass; to distress; to torture.

He drives to the heart, and there he tortures
Doubts, dangers, and fears of the conscience,
Fear and despair, and all that for his marriage. Shakespeare.

Pleasure enchants, and tortures the soul,
And goes to the heart, and there he tortures. Shakespeare.

Didst thou, wife, but hadst the grace
That was my soul, thou couldst not talk thus coolly. Shakespeare.

8. To distort; to turn to a wrong posture.

To wring the neck, to turn it out of man's hands, the knowledge of God's, don't pay, without all reason. Shakespeare.

Lord, how dare the furies thus wring the features? Shakespeare.

9. To persecute with extortion.

The merchant, who has been often wronged and wrung to the quick, but were never quick and lively in thanks to me by whole deceivers they were true. Shakespeare.

To WRING, v. n. To writhe with anguish.

His ailment's office to speak pain,
To those that were under the hand of terror,
But no man's virtue nor faith away
To be to march, when he shall enquire
The like himself. Shakespeare.

his laundress, his washer, and his wringer. Shakespeare.

WRINKLE, n. f. [spindle, Sax. wrinkel,
Dutch.]

1. Corrugation or furrow of the skin or the face.

Give me that glass, and therein will I read:
No deeper wrinkles yet! Hath sorrow struck
So many blows upon this face of mine,
And made no deeper wounds? Shakespeare.

She hath continued a virgin without any visible token, or least wrinkle, of old age. Hovel.
To see a beggar's brat in riches flow,
Adds not a wrinkle to my even brow. Dryden.

Though you, and all your senseless tribe,
Could art, or time, or nature bribe,

To make you look like beauty's queen,
And hold for ever at fifteen;

No bloom of youth can ever blind
The cracks and wrinkles of your mind;

All men of sense will pass your door,
And crowd to Stella's at fourscore. Swift.

2. Rumples of cloth.

Any roughness.
Our British heaven was all serene;
No threatening cloud was high.

Not the least wrinkle to deform the sky. Dryden.

To WRINKLE, v. n. [ppinchan, Saxon.]
1. To corrugate; to contract into furrows.

It is that fortune's ale
To let the wretched man wring his wealth,
To view with hollow eye and wrinkled brow
An age of poverty. Shakespeare.

So he makes us wrinkle up the nose, and wring the nostrils also, at the time we are drawing up the upper lip. Here friends attend.

That in mixt tunces the wrinkled nose offend
Here food like fare, like an ancient mud,
Her wrinkled form is black and white away. Pope.

Here food like fare, like an ancient mud,
Her wrinkled form is black and white away. Pope.

1. One who practises the art of writing.
2. An author.

All three were ruined by justice and sentence, as delinquents, and all three famous writers. Bacon.
Pleasant times are the best to live in, though not so proper to furnish materials for a writer. Addison.

Writers are often more influenced by a desire of fame, than a regard to the public good. Addison.

Would a writer know how to behave himself with relation to posterity, let him consider in old books what he finds that he is glad to know, and what omissions he most laments. Swift

To WRITER. v. a. [from write, Saxon.]

1. To distort; to deform with distortion.
It cannot be this weak and written thrump
Should strike such terror in his enemies.

Shakespeare.

Hatefullest distill'd with'd their jaws

With foot and under. Milton.

Her mouth she with'd, her forehead taught to frown,

Her eyes to sparkle fires to love unknown;

Her fallow cheeks her envious mind did show,

And every feature spoke aloud the curthens of a fiend.

Dryden.

2. To twist with violence.

Then Satan first knew pain,

And with'd him to and fro convolv'd. Milton.

Amid the plumed furies it took its course,

And in the spinal marrow spent its force;

The monster luf'd blood, and rag'd in vain,

And with'd his body to and fro with pain,

He bit the dust. Addison.

3. To writ; to force by violence; to torture; to distort.

The reason which he yieldeth, sheweth the least part of his meaning to be that whereunto his words are written. Hooker

4. To twist.

The king of heav'n

Bar'd his red arm, and launching from the sky

His written bolt, not shaking empty smoke,

Down to the deep abyss the flaming felon strook.

Dryden.

To WRITER. v. n. To be convolved with agony or torture.

Let each be broken on the rack;

Then, with what life remains, upbraid, and left

To writhe at leisure round the bloody stake. Addison.

To WRITER. v. a. [from writhe.] To wrinkle; to corrugate. Obsolete.

Her writhe skin, as rough as in spite mind,

So feebly was, that would have loath'd all woman-kind.

Spenser.

WRITING. n. f. [from write.]

1. A legal instrument; as, the writings of an estate.

Gentlemen keep writings in their closets, ladies medicines. Seller.

2. A compofure; a book.

They thought no other writings in the world should be studied; inasmuch as, one of their great prophets exhorting them to cast away all respects unto human writings, to his motion they condescended. Hooker.

Such arguments had an invincible force with those pagan philosophers who became christians, as we find in most of their writings. Addison.

3. A written paper of any kind.

In at his windows there

Writings, all tending to the same opinion

That Rome holds of his country. Shakspeare.

WRITINGMASTER. n. f. One who teaches to write.

The facility of which I spoke consists not in bold strokes, if it makes not a great effect at a distance: that sort of freedom belongs rather to a writing-master than a painter. Dryden.

WRITTEN. The part. pass. of write.

Their doctrine and their story written left,
They die. Milton.

Language is a connexion of audible signs, the most apt in nature for communication of our thoughts:

written language is a depiction of the said audible signs by letters visible. Holder.

WRONG. The part. pass. of To wrong. Spenser.

WRONG. n. f. [from wrong, Saxon.]

1. An injury; a designed or known detriment; not right, not justice.

It is a harm, and no wrong, which he hath received. Sidney.

If he may not command them, then that law doth a wrong that binds him to bring them forth to be punished. Spenser.

They ever do pretend
To have received a wrong, who wrong intend. Daniel.

One spoke much of right and wrong. Milton.

Imitation of an author is the most advantageous way for a translator, to show himself, but the greatest wrong which can be done to the reputation of the dead. Dryden.

Cowley preferred a garden and a friend to those whom, in our own wrong, we call the great. Dryden.

Expecting more in my own wrong,
Protracting life, I've liv'd a day too long. Dryden.

In the judgment of right and wrong, every man has a felt. Watts.

2. Error; not right; not truth.

Be not blindly guided by the throng,

The multitude is always in the wrong. Roscommon.

Here was wrong on both sides; and what would follow but confusion? Lopeley.

Proceed; quoth Dick, sir, I aver
You have already gone too far;

When people once are in the wrong,

Each line they add is much too long:

Who foolish walks, but walks astray,

Is only farther from his way. Prior.

WRONG. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Not morally right; not just; not agreeable to propriety or truth, not true.

I find you are an invincible Amazon, since you will overcome, though in a wrong matter. Sidney.

If it be right to comply with the wrong, then it is wrong to comply with the right. Lopeley.

When the dictates of honour are contrary to those of religion and equity, they give wrong, ambitious, and false ideas of what is good and laudable. Spectator.

Their hearts are constantly employed, perverted, and kept in a wrong state, by the indolent use of such things as are lawful to be used. Law.

2. Not physically right; unfit; unsuitable.

Of Gloucester's treachery,
And of the loyal service of his son,

When I inform'd him, then he call'd me fat,

And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out. Shakspeare.

We never think of the main business of life, till a vain repentance mends us of it at the wrong end. Flouge.

Dividing a living of five hundred pounds a year into ten parts, is a contrivance, the meaning whereof hath got on the wrong side of my comprehension. Swift.

Singularly flows something wrong in the mind. Clough.

Ten endure wrong, for one that writes amiss. Pope.

To WRONG. v. a. [from the noun.] To injure; to use unjustly, either by doing injury, or imputing evil without justice.

So worthy a part of divine justice we should greatly wrong, if we did not esteem preaching as the blessed ordinance of God. Hooker.

For fear the times her tender foot should wrong,
Be firew'd with fragrant flowers all along. Spenser.

Judge me, you gods! wrong I mine enemy? Shakspeare.

Once more farewell!
And know thou wrong'd me, if thou think'st

Ever was love or ever grief like mine. Addison.

WRONGDOER. n. f. [wrong and doer.] An injurious person.

She resolved to spend all her years in bewailing the wrong, and yet praying for the wrongdoer. Sidney.

If any feat be taken away by a stranger, the churchwarden may have action against the wrongdoer. Ayliffe.

WRONGER. n. f. [from wrong.] He that injures; he that does wrong.

That cuckold lives in bliss,
Who, certain of his fate, loves not his wronger.

Many times a prince is driven to spend far more of his treasure in punishing by war the wrongers of his people, than the loss of his people did amount unto. Ruligh.

WRONGFUL. adj. [wrong and full.] Injurious; unjust.

I am to far from granting thy request,
That I despite thee for thy wrongful suit. Shakspeare.

He that hath wronged so in daily trade, that he knows not in what measure he hath done it, must redeem his fault by alms, according to the value of his wrongful dealing. Taylor.

Those whom forms of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause,
Not want they lots, nor judges to review
The wrongful sentence, and award anew. Dryden.

WRONGFULLY. adv. [from wrongful.] Unjustly.

Dorus, and Pamela, you blame your fortune very wrongfully, since the fault is not in fortune, but in you, that cannot frame yourself to your fortune, and as wrongfully do require Mopla to do great a disparagement as to her father's servant. Sidney.

This poor fellow
He had thought to murder wrongfully. Shakspeare.

Salus then, exclaiming loud,
Urges his cause may in the count be heard,
And pleads, the prize is wrongfully conferr'd. Dryden.

WRONGFULLY. adv. [from wrongfully.] Unjustly.

Dorus, and Pamela, you blame your fortune very wrongfully, since the fault is not in fortune, but in you, that cannot frame yourself to your fortune, and as wrongfully do require Mopla to do great a disparagement as to her father's servant. Sidney.

This poor fellow
He had thought to murder wrongfully. Shakspeare.

Salus then, exclaiming loud,
Urges his cause may in the count be heard,
And pleads, the prize is wrongfully conferr'd. Dryden.

I cry thee mercy, for suspecting a fear of the least of old nature, what, would you accuse him wrongfully? Dryden.

He who suffers wrongfully in a man's opinion, resolves to give him reason for his suspicion. Spectator.

WRONGLY. adv. [from wrong.] Unjustly; amiss.

What thou wouldst lightly,
That wouldst thou holdly; wouldst not play false,
And yet wouldst wrongly win. Shakspeare.

Madmen having joined together some ideas very wrongly, err, as men do that argue right from wrong principles. Locke.

WRONG. The pret. and part. of write.

No man has the state of his soul drawn upon his face, nor the decree of his election wrote upon his forehead. He who would know a man thoroughly, must follow him into the closet of his heart, the the prerogative of omniscience.

WROTH. adj. [prob. Saxon; wrod, Danish.]

Angry. Out of use.

The Lord said unto Cain, Why art thou wroth?

WROUGHT. [progb, Saxon. The pret.

and part. pass. as it seems, of work; as the Dutch wercken makes gerocht; or, more analogically, of the old word wreak.]

1. Effected; performed.

Why trouble ye the woman? for she hath wrought

a good work upon me. Matthew.

The Jews wanted not power and ability to have convinced the world of the falsehood of their miracles, had they never been wrought. Stephens.

2. Influenced; prevailed on.

Had I thought the sight of my poor image would thus have wrought you, for the stone is mine, Shakespeare.

If thou be one that hast, by the help of God's grace, been wrought upon by these calls, and brought from a prophane, or worldly, to a christian course of life, thou art surely in the highest degree tied to magnify and praise his goodness.

3. Produced; caused.

All his good prov'd ill in me,

And wrought but malice. Milton.

They wrought by their faithfulness the publick safety. Dryden.

This wrought the greatest confusion in the unbel-

ieving Jews, and the greatest conviction in the Gentiles, who every where speak with astonishment of these truths they met with in this new magazine of learning which was opened. Addison.

His too eager love

Has made him busy to his own destruction,

His threats have wrought this change of mind in Pyrrhus. Philips.

4. Worked; laboured.

They that wrought in silver, and whose works are unsearchable, are gone down to the grave. Bar.

Moses and Eleazar took the gold, even all wrought jewels. Numbers.

Celestiall pompously, divinely wrought. Milton.

What might be wrought

Fust, or graven in metal. Milton.

5. Gained; attained.

We ventur'd on such dang'rous seas,

That if we wrought out life, 'twas ten to one.

Shakespeare.

6. Operated.

Such another field

They dreaded worse than hell: so much the fear

Of thunder, and the sword of Michael,

Wrought still within them. Milton.

7. Used in labour.

Take an heifer which hath not been wrought with, and which hath not drawn in the yoke.

Deuteronomy.

8. Worked; driven.

As infection from body to body is received many times by the body passive, yet is it by the good disposition thereof repulsed and wrought out, before it be formed in a disease. Bacon.

9. Actuated.

Vain Morat, by his own rashness wrought,

Too soon discover'd his ambitious thought;

Believ'd me his before I spoke him fair,

And pitch'd his head into the ready snare. Dryden.

10. Manufactured.

It had been no less a breach of peace to have wrought any mine of his, than it is now a breach of peace to take a town of his in Guiana, and burn it.

Raleigh.

11. Formed.

He that hath wrought us for the same thing, is

God. 2 Corinthians.

12. Excited by degrees; produced by degrees.

The spirit is wrought,

To dare things high, set up an end my thought.

Chapman.

The two friends had wrought themselves to such an habitual tenderness for the children under their direction, that each of them had the real passion of a father. Addison.

Advantage was taken of the sanguine temper which so many successes had wrought the nation up to. Swift.

Whatever littleness and vanity is to be observed in the minds of women, it is, like the cruelty of butchers, a temper that is wrought into them by that life which they are taught and accustomed to lead. Lowe.

13. Guided; managed.

A ship by skilful steerer men wrought. Milton.

14. Agitated; disturbed.

We stay upon your leisure—

—Give me your favour; my dull brain was wrought

With things forgot. Shakespeare.

Chapman.

No mortal was ever so much at ease, but his shoes

wrung him somewhere. L'Estrange.

The tender anguish nature shoots

Through the wrung bosom of the dying man.

Thomson.

WRY. adj. [from writhe.]

1. Crooked; deviating from the right direction.

Sometimes to her news of myself to tell

I go about, but then is all my best

Wry words, and flann'ring, or else doltish dumb;

Say then, can this but of enchantment come? Sidon.

2. Distorted.

It is but a kick with thy heels, and a wry mouth, and Sir Roger will be with thee. Arbutnot.

Instructive work! whole wry-mouth'd portraiture

Display'd the fates her confessors endure. Pope.

Cutting the wry neck is never to be prestid,

but when the disorder is a contraction of the muscles. Sharp.

He mangles and puts a wry sense upon protestant writers. Atterbury.

To WRY. v. n. [from the adjective.] To be contorted and writhed; to deviate from the right direction.

These wry too much on the right hand, ascribing to the holy scripture such kind of perfection as it cannot have. Sandys.

To WRY. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make to deviate; to distort.

To what pale are our minds brought, that from the right line of virtue are wryed to these crooked shifts? Sidney.

WRY'NECK. n. f. [torquilla, Lat.] A bird.

X.

X Is a letter which, though found in Saxon words, begins no word in the English language.

Y At the beginning of words, is commonly taken, though I think erroneously, for a consonant; at the end, and when it follows a consonant, is a vowel, and has the sound of i. It is used at the end of words, and whenever two ys would come together, and in words derived from the Greek, to express the u. Y was much used by the Saxons, whence

y is found for i in the old English writers. Y is, in old English, sometimes prefixed as an increasing syllable to preterites and passive participles of verbs. It seems borrowed from ge, the Saxon augmentum of the preterit. It is sometimes put before present tenses, but I think erroneously.

YACHT. n. f. [a Dutch word.] A small ship for carrying passengers.

YAWN. n. f. [grawn, Saxon.]

1. Enclosed ground adjoining to a house.

One of the boys leaped down into the neighbour's yard, where, nothing regarding the crowing of the cocks, he sat them up. Brown.

Xanthus one day sent Aesop into the yard, and bade him look well about him. L'Estrange.

His wanton kids, with budding horns prepar'd,

Fight harmless battles in his homely yard. Dryden.

2. [gepb, Saxon.] A measure of three feet.

He look'd in years, yet in his years were seen
A youthful vigour, and autumnal green. Dryden.
EARLY, adj. [from year.] Being a year old.

A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke,
Intam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke. Pope.
EARLY, adj. [from year.] Annual;
happening every year; lasting a year.

The yearly course that brings this day about,
Shall never see it but a holiday. Shakespeare.

Why the changing oak should shed
The yearly honour of his stately head;
Whilst the distinguisht yew is ever teen,
Unchang'd his branch, and permanent his green. Prior.

EARLY, adv. Annually; once a year.

He that outlives this day, and fees old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say, to-morrow is Saint Crispin. Shakespeare.

For numerous blessings yearly shower'd,
And property with plenty crown'd;
Or freedom still maintain'd alive;
For thee, and more, accept our pious praise. Dryden.

Not numerous are our joys when life is new,
And yearly some are falling of the few. Young.
O YEARN, v. n. [euphron, Saxon.] To feel great internal uneasiness. In Spenser it is sometimes earn. It is by Spenser used for desire, or the pain of longing;
it now implies tenderness or pity.

He desir'd to tread in due degree,
But chaf'd, and foam'd, with courage fierce and fiery,
And to be eas'd of that base burden full did yearn.
Spenser.

Make the libbard stern
Rave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yearn.
Spenser.

Though peeping close into the thick,
Might see the moving of some quick;
But were it fairy, fiend, or snake,
My courage earn'd it to wake,
And manfully thereto shot. Spenser.

Fall'n, he is dead,
And we must yearn therefore. Shakespeare.
Joseph made haste; for his bowels did yearn upon his brother: and he sought where to weep, and he entered into his chamber. Genesis.

When the fair Luciothoe he spy'd,
To check his floods impatient Phœbus yearn'd,
Though all the world was in his course concern'd.
Waller.

Yet for all the yearning pain
Y^e have suffer'd for their loves, in vain,
Utear they'll prove to me and coy.
To have, and t' hold, and to enjoy. Hudibras.

Where our heart does but relent, his melts;
Where our eye pities, his bowels yearn. South.

At beholding the miseries of others, they find such yearnings in their bowels, and such sensible commotions rais'd in their breasts, as they can by no means satisfy. Colamy.

Your mother's heart yearns towards you. Addison.

Unmov'd the mind of Ithacus remain'd;
But Anticles, unable to controul,
Spoke loud the language of his yearning soul. Pope.

To YEARN, v. a. To grieve; to vex.
She laments for it, that it would Yearn your heart to see it. Shakespeare.

I am not covetous of gold,
It yearns me not if men my garments wear. Shakespeare.

YEAST, n. f. See YEST.

YELL, n. f. [from zealepe, yellow, Sax.]
The yellow part of the egg. It is commonly pronounced, and often written, yolk.

The yolk of the egg conducteth little to the generation of the bud, but only to the nourishment of the same: for if a chicken be opened, when it is new hatched, you shall find much of the yolk remaining. Bacon.

That a chicken is formed out of the yolk of an egg, with some ancient philosophers, the people find opinion. Bacon.

All the feather'd kind
From th' included yolk, not ambient white, arose. Dryden.

To YELL, v. n. To cry out with horrour and agony.

Nor the night raven, that still deadly yells,
Nor guilty vultures, make us once affear'd. Spenser.

Each new moan,
New widows howl, new orphans cry; new sorrows
Strike hous'n on the face, that it refoonds,
As it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out Like syllables of dolour. Shakespeare.

Now worse than ere he was before,
Poor Puck doth yell, poor Puck doth roar,
That wak'd queen Mab, who doubt'd ere
Some treason had been wrought her. Drayton.

Yelling monsters that with cackels cry Surround me. Milton.

Night-truck fancy dreams the yelling ghost.
Thomson.

YELL, n. f. [from the verb.] A cry of horror.

With like tim'rous accent and dire yell,
As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spread in populous cities. Shakespeare.

Hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of sounding ladies, and of dragging chains.
The Trojan stood, stonish'd at their cries,
And ask'd his guide from whence those yells arise. Dryden.

Others in frantic mood
Run howling through the streets; their hideous yells
Rend the dark welkin. Philips.

YELLOW, adj. [zealepe, Sax. ghelwece, Dutch; giello, Italian.] Being of a bright glaring colour, as gold.

Only they that come to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow,
Will be deceiv'd. Shakespeare.

He brought the green ear and the yellow thief.
Milton.

After a lively orange, followed an intense, bright, and copious yellow, which was also the best of all the yellows. Newton.

Negligent of food,
Scarce teen, he wades among the yellow broom. Thomson.

YELLOW BOY, n. f. A gold coin. A very low word.

John did not stave the cause; there wanted not yellowboys to fer counsel. Arbuthnot.

YELLOWHAMMER, n. f. [cenchrinus bel- lioni.] A bird.

YELLOWISH, adj. [from yellow.] Approaching to yellow.

Although amber be commonly of a yellowish colour, yet there is found of it also black, white, brown, green, blue, and purple. Woodward.

YELLOWISHNESS, n. f. [from yellowish.]
The quality of approaching to yellow.

Brouled madder, being drenched with the like alkalicate solution, exchanged its yellowishness for a redness. Bogle.

YELLOWNESS, n. f. [from yellow.]

1. The quality of being yellow.

Apples, covered in time and ashes, were well in-tured, as appeared in the yellowness and sweetness.
Bacon.

Yellowness of the skin and eyes, and a falcon coloured urine, are signs of an inflammatory disposition of the liver. Arbuthnot.

2. It is yellowness that Shakespeare for jealousy.
Lord Will pottels with yellowness. Shakespeare.

YELLOWNESS, n. f. A disease in horses.

When the gallpipe is stopp'd up, that matter which should be turned into gall is carried back into the blood, and tinctures it yellow; so that the eyes, inside of the lips, flaxen, and all the parts of the horse that are capable of showing the colour, appear yellow. Farrar's Dict.

His horse ip'd with yellowness, and ip'd with the yellowness. Shakespeare.

To YELL, v. n. [zealepe, Saxon.] To bark as a beagle-bowd after his prey.

A little herd of England's tim'rous deer.
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shakespeare.

YEO'MAN, n. f. [Of this word the original is much doubted. The true etymology seems to be that of Junius, who derives it from german, Frisick, a villager.]

1. A man of a small estate in land; a farmer; a gentleman farmer.

Gentlemen should use their children as the honest farmers and substantial yeomen do theirs. Locke.

He that has a spaniel by his side is a yeoman of about one hundred pound a year, an honest man;
he is just qualified to kill an hare. Addison.

2. It seems to have been anciently a kind of ceremonious title given to soldiers.

whence we have still yeomen of the guard.
Tall yeomen teened they, and of great might;
And were outan, ed ready full for fight. Spenser.

Yeom, good yeoman,
Whole lumps were made in England, drew as here.
The mettle of your pattern. Shakespeare.

He instituted, for the security of his person, a band of fifty archers, and a captain, to attend him, by the name of yeoman of his guard. Bacon.

The appointment for th' ensuing night he heard,
And there fore in the evening had prepar'd
Two bawny yeomen of his trusty guard. Dryden.

At Windsor St. John whispers me t' th' ear;
The waiters stand in ranks, the yeomen cry
Make room! as if a duke were passing by. Swift.

3. It was probably a freeholder not advanced to the rank of a gentleman.

His grandfather was Lionel duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward king of England;
Spring crested yeomen from so deep a root? Shakespeare.

4. It seems to have had likewise the notion of a gentleman servant.

A jolly yeoman, marshal of the hall,
Whole name was appetite, he did bestow
Both guests and meats. Spenser.

YEO'MANRY, n. f. [from yeoman.] The collective body of yeomen.

This did amortize a great part of the lands of the kingdom unto the hold and occupation of the yeomanry, or middle people, of a condition between gentlemen and cottagers. Bacon.

To YERK, v. a. [of unknown etymology.]

particle opposed to no.

Pray, Madam, are you married? - Yes - Yes.

2. It is a word of enforcement; even so;
not only so, but more.

This were a fit speech for a general in the head of an army, when going to battle, and it is no less fit speech for the head of a council, upon a deliberation of entrance into war. Bacon.

Yes, you despite the man to hold you for a
Who from his study rails at human kind. Pope.

Though what he learns he speaks. Pope.

YEST, n. f. [ye, Saxon.]

There he saw the fainting Grecians yield,
And here the trembling Trojans quit the field,
Pursued by fierce Achilles. Dryden.

2. To comply with any person, or power.

Considering this present age, so full of toadyism and weak of brain, behold we yield to the stream thereof. Hooker.

I see a yielding in the looks of France:
Mark how they whisper. Shakespeare.
This unnatural loving, if all,
Why hath it given me a word of love?

If good, why do I yield to this flag of union,
Whole horrid image doth upbraid my hair? Shallop.
With her much fair speech she caused him to yield. Proverbs.

The Jews have agreed to desire thee, that thou wouldest bring down Paul; but do not thou yield unto them. Acts.

The Jew the world that they are not of a yielding temper, which will be wronged or baffled Kettell.

3. To comply with things required or enforced.

There could be no secure peace, except the Iacchionians yielded to those things, which being granted, it would be no longer in their power to hurt the Athinians. Bacon.

If much conceit
Thereto, to that degree I could yield. Milton.

4. To concede, to admit, to allow; not to deny.

If we yield that there is a God, and that this God is almighty and just, it cannot be avoided but that, after this life ended, he administers justice unto men. Hooker.

5. To give place, as inferior in excellence or any other quality.

The fight of Achilles and Cygnus, and the fray between the Lapithae and Centaurs, yield to no other part of this poet. Dryden.

Tell me in what more happy fields
The thistle springs, to which the lily yields. Pope.

YOLDER, n. f. [from yield.] One who yields.

Briars and thorns at their apparel flitch,
Some sleeves, some hats; from yielders all things catch. Shakespeare.

Some guard these traitors to the block of death,
Treason's true bed, and yielder up of breath. Shallop.

YORI, or Of Yore, adv. [georgana, Saxon.]

1. Long.

Witness the burning altars, which he swore,

And, guilty, heavy as of his bold perjury;

Which, though he hath polluted off and yore,

Yet I to them for judgment put dole. Spenser.

2. Of old time; long ago, with of before it.

And seated here a fee, his bishoprick of yore,

Upon the farthest point of this untutted shore.

Drayton.

Three bright eyed Yolla long of yore

To solitary Saturn lone. Milton.

A widow somewhat old, and very poor. Dryden.

In times of yore an ancient baron liv'd;

Great gifts bestow'd, and great respect receiv'd.

Prior.

The devil was piqued with faintship to behold,

And long'd to tempt him, like a good Job of old;

But Satan now is wiser than of yore,

And tempts by making rich, not making poor.

Pope.

YOW, pron. [eop, nith, Saxon; of ge, ye.]

1. The oblique case of ye.

Ye have heard of the designation of the grace of God, which is given me to you ward. Ephraim.

I thought to show you

How easy 'twas to die, by my example,

And banish fate before you. Dryden.

2. It is used in the nominative, in common language, when the address is to persons;

and though first introduced by corruption, is now established. In the following lines you and ye are used ungrammatically in the places of each other; but even this use is customary.

What gain you by forbidding it to tease ye?

It now can neither trouble ye nor please ye. Dryd.

3. It is the ceremonious word for the second person singular, and is always used, except in solemn language.

In vain you tell your parting lover,

You will two sands may wait him over. Prior.

But, methinks, if the fates withhold, and you

Are destined victims willing victim too. Pope.

4. It is used indefinitely, as the French on; any one; whoever.

We asked by what was one of those rivers of barren matter this looks, at a distance like a new plowed land, but as you come near it, you see nothing but a low heap of heavy disintegrated clods. Dutton.

5. You is used in the subsequent members of a sentence, as distinguished from ye.

Stand forth, ye champions, who the gambler wield.

Or you the swiftest racers of the field. Pope.

 As the way went in youth and summer days.
Spenser.
YOUTH, pronoun. [open, Saxon]
 1. Belonging to you. It is used properly when we speak to more than one, and ceremoniously and customarily when to only one.
 Either your unparalleled mistress is dead, or she's outworn by a trifle. Shakespeare.
 Impute your danger to our ignorance;
 The bravest men are subject most to chance. Dryden.
 Ye dauntless Dardans hear,
 Think on the strength which once your fathers bore. Pope.
 2. Youth is used in an indeterminate sense.
 Every true man's apparel fits your thief: if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough. If it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough; to every true man's apparel fits your thief. Shakespeare.
 There is a great affinity between coms and poetry, and your medallist and critic are much nearer related than the world imagine. Addison.
 A disagreement between these seldom happens, but among your antiquaries and schoolmen. Fontenay.
 3. Youth is used when the substantive goes before or is understood: as, this is your book, this book is yours.
 Pray for this man and for his issue,
 Whole heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
 And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakespeare.
 That done, our day of marriage shall be yours,
 One feast, one house, one mutual happiness. Shakespeare.
 This kiss, if it durst speak,
 Would stretch thy spirits up into the air.
 Conceive and fire thee well. —
 - Yours in the ranks of death. Shakespeare.
 He is forsworn, if e'er those eyes of yours
 Behold another day break in the east. Shakespeare.
 While the sword this monarchy secures,
 'Tis manag'd by an abler hand than yours. Dryden.
 My wealth, my city, and myself are yours. Dryden.
 It is my employment to revive the old of past ages to the present, as it is yours to transmit the young of the present to the future. Pope.

 Within the eye of honour; be assur'd,
 My purse, my person, my extremest means,
 Lie all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakespeare.
 O heavens!
 If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
 Allow obedience, if yourselves are old,
 Make it your cause. Shakespeare.
 2. In the oblique cases it has the sense of reciprocation, or reference to the same subject mentioned before. as, you love only yourself; you have betrayed yourselves by your rapine.
 - Whenever you are more intent upon securing your persons than upon perfecting of your souls, you are much more beside yourselves than is that man that has a laced coat than a healthful body. Far.
 3. It is sometimes reciprocal in the administrative.
 Be but yourselves. Pope.
YOUTH, n. f. [jeuŋθ, Saxon.]
 1. The part of life succeeding to childhood and adolescence; the time from fourteen to twenty-eight.
 But could a youth last, and live still breed,
 Had joys no date, and age no need,

YOUTH n. f. [from young.] Youth.
 Then these delights my mind might move,
 To live with thee, and be thy love. Raleigh.
 His flarry helm unbuckled flow'd him prime
 In manhood, where youth ended. Milton.
 The solidity, quantity, and strength of the element, is to be proportioned to the labour or quantity of muscular motion, which in youth is greater than any other age. Arbuthnot.
 2. A young man.
 Sward's son,
 And many unrough youths even now,
 Protect their last of manhood. Shakespeare.
 It thus were seen,
 The happiest youth viewing his progress through,
 What perils past, what crosses to come,
 Would shut the book and sit him down and die. Shakespeare.
 O'er the lofty gate his art embolden'd
 Andriago's death, and off-rings to his ghost;
 Sev'n youths from Athens yearly sent, to meet
 The late appointed by revengeful Crete. Dryden.
 The pious chief
 A hundred youths from all his train elects,
 And to the Larian court their course directs. Dryden.
 3. Young men. Collectively.
 As it is fit to read the best authors to youth first, so let them be of the upmost and clearest, as Livy before Sallust, Sidney before Donne. Ben Jonson.
 About him exercis'd heroic games
 Th' unarmed youth of heav'n. Milton.
 The graces put not more exactly on
 Th' attire of Venus, when the ball she won,
 Than that young beauty by thy care is dress'd,
 When all your youth preters her to the rest. Waller.
YOUTHFUL, adj. [youth and full.]
 1. Young.
 Our army is dispers'd already:
 Like youthful flocks unyok'd they took their course,
 East, west, north, south. Shakespeare.
 There, in a heap of slain, among the rest,
 Two youthful knights they found beneath a load
 Opprest
 Of slaughter'd foes. Dryden.
 2. Suitable to the first part of life.

Thy echo, thy debtor, thy foil thy zany,
I shall be thought, it may be like this. I hope,
All the world's his, though I be thy ape. Dante
Oh, great restorer of the good old usage,
Preacher at once, and zany, of thy age. Pope.

ZARNICH. n. f. A substance in which ornament is found, it approaches to the nature of ornament, but without its lustre and foliated texture. The common kinds of zarnich are green and yellow. Hill.

ZEAL. n. f. [ζῆλος; zelus, Lat.] Passionate ardour for any person or cause.

In this patient age, wherein zeal hath drown'd clarity and skill, meekness will not now suffer any man to move, whatsoever he shall hear reproved by whomsoever. Hooker.

If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you: but it is no matter, this poor fellow doth better, this doth enter the zeal I had to see him. Shakespeare

O Cromwell, Cromwell!
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shakespeare.

The bare fervor and zeal is told in commutation for much other pity, by many the most eager contenders. Hammond.

Among the seraphims
Abel, than whom none with more zeal ador'd
The Deity, and divine commands obey'd,
Stood up, and in a flame of zeal fervor,
The current of his fury thus oppos'd. Milton

Had zeal anciently arm'd itself against sovereignty, we had never heard of a calendar of saints. Hobbes.

We must look our prayers be with zeal and candour: it is not enough that we so far attend them, as barely to know what it is we say, but we must put forth all the affection and devotion of our souls. Duty of Man.

Zeal, the blind conductor of the will. Dryden.

Z E A

One with such a zeal the cause embrac'd,
As women, where they will, are all in haste,
The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overcome by the fury of the tide. Dryden.
The princes applaud with a furious joy,
And the king leav'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy. Dryden

Seriousness and zeal in religion is natural to the English. Tillotson

Good men often blench the reputation of their piety by overacting some things in their religion; by an indiseect zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned. Tillotson.

True zeal forms not to be any one single affection of the soul, but rather a strong mixture of many holy affections, rather a gracious contemplation of the whole mind, than any one particular grace, swaying a devout heart, and filling it with all pious intentions; all not only uncounterfeit, but most fervent. Spratt.

When the sins of a nation have provoked God to forsake it, he suffers those to concur in the most pernicious counsels for enslaving conscience, who pretend to the greatest zeal for the liberty of it. Stillingfleet.

This rebellion has discovered to his majesty, who have espoused his interests with zeal or indifference. Addison.

A storm of flattery and a zeal for truth. Pope.
There is nothing nobler in a clergyman but burning zeal for the salvation of souls, nor any thing poorer in his profession, but idleness and worldly spirit. Law.

ZEALOT. n. f. [zeleot, Fr. ζῆλωτης.]

One passionately ardent in any cause. Generally used in disparage.

But now, whereas these zealots complain of us for partaking with the Roman church in things lawful and good, they themselves comply with the same in articles and actions which are of no good quality. White.

The fury of zealots, intestine bitterness and dissension, were the greatest occasion of the destruction of Jerusalem. King Charles.

Are not these men too often the greatest zealots, who are most notoriously ignorant? true zeal should always begin with true knowledge, and thence proceed to an unvarnished passion, for what it once knows to be worthy of such passion. Spratt.

No wonder that so many of these deluded zealots have been engaged in a cause which they at first abhorred, and have waded or acted for years in an enterprise, that might have ended in the extinction of the protestant religion. Addison.

ZEALOUS. adj. [from zeal.] Ardently passionate in any cause.

Our hearts are right with God, and our intentions pious, if we set our temporal affairs with a desire no greater than our necessity, and in actions of religion we be zealous, active, and operative, so far as prudence will permit. Taylor.

This day, at eight of noon, came to my sphere
A spirit, such as he seem'd, to know
More of the Almighty's works. Milton.

We should be not only devout towards God, but zealous towards men; endeavouring by all prudent means to recover them out of those snares of the devil, whereby they are taken captive. Deacon of Patry.

It is not at all good to be zealous against any person, but only against their crimes. It is better to be zealous for things than for persons; but then it should be only for good things. A rule that does certainly exclude all manner of zeal for all things, all manner of zeal for little things. Spratt.

Z E U

Being instructed only in the general, and zealous in the main design, and as finite beings not admitted into the secrets of government, the last resorts of providence, or capable of discovering the final purposes of God, they must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends in which alone they can be one each other. Trudeau.

I am, thus loved himself, he may be zealous in the salvation of souls. Law.

ZEALOUSLY. adv. [from zealous.] With passionate ardour.

Thy care is lost, and zealously attends,
To fill thy odorous lamp with deeds of light,
And hope that reaps not shame. Milton.

To enter into a party as into an order of friars, with a resigned obedience to superiors, is very unsuitable with the civil and religious liberties we so zealously assert. Swift.

ZEALOUSNESS. n. f. [from zealous.] The quality of being zealous.

ZECHIN. n. f. [from Zechu, a place in Venice, where the mint is settled for coinage.] A gold coin worth about nine shillings sterling.

ZELARY. n. f. [zelouire, Fr.] A spicy plant, somewhat like ginger in its leaves, but of a sweet scent.

ZED. n. f. The name of the letter z.

Thou who on zed, thou unnecessary letter, Stallgrave.

ZETH. n. f. [Arabic.] The point over head opposite to the nadir.

Good men! it we believe that men do live under the zenith of both their poles.

Though none come the nearest to it, yet, Why bear we not the like oath of our souls? Dante.

These zealots are deluged by the motion of the sun, when that approaches nearest our zenith, or vertical point, we call it summer. Blount.

ZEPHYR. } n. f. [zephyrus, Lat.] The ZEPHYRUS. } west wind; and, poetically, any calm soft wind.

They are as gentle.

As zephyrus blowing below the violet. Shakespeare.

Zephyr you shall see a youth with a merry countenance, holding in his hand a fan with wings displayed, as about to hug. Beaumont.

Fourth rush the leviant and the potent winds,
Eurus and Zephyr. Milton

Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes. Milton

ZEST. n. f.

1. The peel of an orange squeezed into wine.

2. A relish; a taste added.

Almighty vanity! to thee they owe
Their zest of pleasure, and their balm of woe. Young.

To ZEST. v. a. To heighten by an additional relish.

ZETHEUS. adj. [from ζῆτις.] Proceeding by inquiry.

ZYGMA. n. f. [from ζῆγμα.] A figure in grammar when a verb agreeing with divers nouns, or an adjective with divers substantives, is referred to one expressly, and to the other by supplement; as, hul overcame hulme, boldness tear, and madness reason.

to be raised; also a low square member serving to support a column instead of a pedestal, base, or plinth. Dict.

ZODIACK, n. s. [zodiacus, Fr. zodiaque, in zodiaque, the living creatures, the figures of which are painted on it in globes.]

1. The track of the sun through the twelve signs; a great circle of the sphere, containing the twelve signs.

The golden sun salutes the morn,
And having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallopeth zodiac in his gilt ring coach. Shaksp.

Years he number'd scarce thirteen,
When fate turn'd cruel:

Yet three ill'd zodiacs had he been
The flage's jewel. Ben Jonson.

It exceeds even their absurdity to suppose the zodiac and planets to be efficient of, and antecedentent to, themselves or to exert any influence before they were in being. Bentley.

Here in a twink, that cast a dawning light,
Sat Sat in thought the mighty Sengyrite;
His sacred head a radiant zodiac crown'd,
And various animals his sides furround. Pope.

2. It is used by Milton for a girdle.

By his side,
As in a glit'ring zodiac, hung the sword
Bataar's dire drad; and in his hand the spear. Milton.

ZONE, n. s. [zonē; zona, Latin]

1. A girdle.

The middle part
Girt like a flury zone his waist, and round

The magick dithy miking zone is pass,
But Sahsbury's garter than for ever last. Granville.

Scarce could the goddess from her nymphs be known.

But by the crescent and the golden zone. Pope.

2. A division of the earth.

The whole surface of the earth is divided into five zones: the first is contained between the two tropicks; and is called the torrid zone. There are two temperate zones, and two frigid zones. The northern temperate zone is terminated by the tropick of Cancer and the arctic polar circle: the southern temperate zone is contained between the tropick of Capricorn and the polar circle: the frigid zones are circumscribed by the polar circles, and the poles are in their centers.

True love is still the same; the torrid zone.
And those more frigid ones,

It must not know:
For love grown cold or hot,
Is lust or friendship, not

The thing we show:
For that a villain would die,
Held down or up too high:

Then think I love more than I can express,
And would love more, could I but love thee less. Suckling.

And as five zones th' aetherial regions bound,
Five correspondent are to earth assigned:

The sun, with rays directly daring down,
Fires all beneath, and fries the middle zone. Dryd.

3. Circuit; circumference.

Scarce the sun
Hath finish'd half his journey, and scarce begins
His up' half in the great zone of heaven. Milton.

ZOOGRAPHY, n. s. [zōō and γραφω] A description of the forms, nature, and properties of animals.

If we contemplate the end, its principal goal cause being the glory of its maker, this leads to divinity; and for its subordinate, as it is designed for alimondal subsistence to living creatures, and medicinal uses to man, we are thereby conducted into zoography. Blauville.

ZOOLOGY, n. s. [zōō and λογω] A treatise concerning living creatures.

ZOOLOGY, n. s. [zōō and λογω] Certain vegetables or substances which partake of the nature both of vegetables and animals.
